Letter to Family

Unit 6

Our class will begin a unit in language arts in which students will read chapters from 90 Miles to Havana, a historical novel by Enrique Flores-Galbis. The novel is based on his experiences of leaving Cuba when he was a boy at the beginning of the Cuban Revolution. In this unit, students will not only read the novel, they will also learn about Latin American history and the Cuban Revolution.

Units 1 and 2 of the Grade 6 CKLA program introduced Grade 6 students to the idea of identity—what makes us who we are. This unit gives students an additional opportunity to think about and discuss the idea of identity in literature and in their own lives. In 90 Miles to Havana, students will observe how the main character’s identity is defined by and changes in the eyes of others as a result of new environments and experiences. In Cuba, the protagonist’s family is part of the educated affluent class. Then he becomes a refugee and temporary orphan of the revolution and finally an immigrant to a new country.

90 Miles to Havana includes the potentially sensitive topic of the Cuban Revolution and the resulting immigration of Cuban families to the United States. This includes scenes of families losing their homes and of children being temporarily separated from their parents. These topics are often emotionally charged and may be challenging to discuss with middle school students. Throughout this unit, students will be given opportunities and support to reflect on these challenging issues. If you wish, you may ask your students to read with you and share what they learned in each day’s class discussion. Note that in the interest of time, students will not be reading all of the chapters in 90 Miles to Havana. If your child wishes to read the remaining chapters, you may want to review or read them together.

If you have any questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Timeline of Latin American History

1200 BCE–1521 CE	Pre-Columbian Empires Olmec (1200–400 BCE) Maya (500 BCE–800 CE) Inca (1250–1532 CE) Aztec (1430–1521 CE)
1492	Christopher Columbus Arrives in the New World Columbus sails from Spain in an attempt to reach the East Indies but makes landfall in the Caribbean. He brings news of the New World back to Europe and attempts to claim territory for Spain.
1494	Treaty of Tordesillas This treaty divides Latin America between Spain and Portugal.
1500s–1790s	Colonial Period Spain and Portugal establish colonies throughout Central and South America.
1790s–1825	Latin American Revolutions Economic problems and war in Europe weaken the power of Spain and Portugal, allowing Latin American nations to begin fighting for their independence. By 1825, most Latin American nations have gained their independence.

The Cuban Revolution

Read this passage about the Cuban Revolution.

After the end of the Spanish-American War in 1898, Cuba became a United States protectorate. This means that the United States protected Cuba from military attacks by other countries. In exchange, the United States largely controlled Cuba's government. This gave Cuba time to develop its own government before it gained independence in 1902. Many American businesses established themselves in Cuba during this time. Even after Cuba became independent, the United States remained deeply involved there. American companies operating in Cuba dominated the economy, making the country highly dependent on the United States. In addition, Cuban governments were often corrupt and favored U.S. business interests. This caused many Cubans to oppose the nation's rulers and fueled anti-American feelings, especially among working-class Cubans.

In 1940, an army officer named Fulgencio Batista was elected president of Cuba. As president, Batista built schools and helped the economy grow. Many Cubans liked him. But in the election of 1944, Batista's chosen candidate was defeated. Batista ran for president again in 1952. When he realized he was not going to win the election, he overthrew the Cuban government with the help of Cuba's military. After gaining power again, Batista ruled as a dictator. He shut down the Cuban legislature and called for new elections in 1954.

A young Cuban lawyer named Fidel Castro was running for the Cuban House of Representatives in 1952. When Batista cancelled the elections, Castro and his supporters—including his brother Raúl—began plotting to take down Batista's dictatorship. On July 26, 1953, Castro and some revolutionaries attacked a Cuban army barracks. The attack failed. Castro was sent to prison, and most of his followers were killed or arrested.

When Castro was released from prison in 1955, he joined other Cuban revolutionaries in Mexico, including Che Guevara. Guevara became an important ally of Castro's. An ally is someone who is on your side. They began planning an invasion of Cuba. In December 1956, Castro and about 80 other revolutionaries landed in Cuba. Batista's army attacked the revolutionaries, killing or capturing most of them. Castro and the other survivors fled to the Sierra Maestra mountains in southwest Cuba and began a campaign of guerilla warfare against the government. Guerilla warfare is a type of warfare in which groups make surprise and quick small-scale raids against soldiers or other government authorities. The word guerilla comes from the Spanish word meaning “little war.”

Other Cubans also opposed Batista’s government. A group of students called the Revolutionary Directorate attacked the presidential palace in Havana in March 1957. Batista responded to these uprisings by suspending the rights of the Cuban people. Freedom of speech and freedom of assembly were taken away. In July 1958, Batista also began a military campaign against Castro’s group, which was called the “26th of July Movement.”

By this time, even the U.S. government’s support of the Batista government was weakening. The United States had stopped supplying Batista with weapons and other aid, which made it difficult for him to equip the Cuban army. Castro invited foreign reporters into his mountain hideout to tell the world about his intention to bring justice and freedom to Cuba. Many people around the world sympathized with him and sent him money and supplies. Some foreigners even came to Cuba to fight alongside Castro and the rebels.

Batista ordered the Cuban army to attack Castro and the rebels, who were hiding in the Sierra Maestra mountains. After several clashes, Castro’s forces began to gain the upper hand. By August 1958, revolutionaries had emerged from the mountains and began moving north, taking control of Cuban towns as they advanced.

On December 30, 1958, rebel forces led by Che Guevara captured a train loaded with supplies for the Cuban army. Batista knew his rule in Cuba was about to end. He fled Cuba on January 1, 1959. Guevara and his forces entered Havana on January 3. They were joined by Castro and his troops on January 8. The Cuban Revolution was over.

Fidel Castro became Cuba’s ruler. His followers carried out violent reprisals—acts of revenge—against people thought to be friendly to the Batista regime. Many of the educated and wealthiest Cubans fled Cuba for the United States during this time. Castro formed a communist government closely aligned with the Soviet Union. In the early 1960s, the Soviet Union was a large communist dictatorship and the United States’ main rival. Castro’s actions led to a breakdown of relations between Cuba and the United States. In 1965, Castro allowed Cubans to leave the country. Many refugees traveled to the United States.

Unit Assessment—90 Miles to Havana

Today you will read two selections—an informational text and a fiction text. After reading the first selection, you will answer several questions based on it. Then, you will read the second selection and answer several questions based on it. Some of the questions have two parts. You should answer Part A of the question before you answer Part B.

“A Letter to President Obama from the Daughter of a Cuban Exile”

1. Your trip to Cuba is a dream, a miracle, a revolution to me. Never did I dare to fantasize that in my lifetime a sitting U.S. president would be shaking hands with Cuban officials at José Martí Airport—the airport my family used to escape Fidel Castro. Yes, Mr. President, I am a child of refugees. Although my Cuban mother came here just before Cuba’s iron curtain clanked shut, the same desperate, fierce homesickness that claimed my refugee relatives overtook her as well.
2. As a teenager, my uncle left Cuba two months after the failed Bay of Pigs invasion. Although on the older side, he was part of the Pedro Pan rescue operation—a CIA undertaking that arranged to airlift children out of Cuba. Many of them were placed with American families. My uncle was lucky. He had an older sister, my mother, waiting for him.
3. But he almost didn’t make it to America. He was on a Pan Am flight that was suddenly grounded by the Cuban military who claimed there was a draft dodger on the airplane. We’ll never know if it was my 19-year-old uncle they were after, because the pilot declared the aircraft sovereign American territory and took off without permission from the tower. My uncle shakes each time he tells the story.
4. I was born in my American father’s hometown in Connecticut in December of 1960 as diplomatic relations with Cuba were deteriorating. My grandmother, my Abuela, arrived from Havana to care for my mother and me. She adjusted to the Connecticut winter mostly by rocking me and singing me lullabies in Spanish and her native Greek. (Yes, Mr. President we are a family who hopscotched its way to the United States, but Cuba is where we left our hearts). After three months, she decided it was time to go back to Cuba. My mother pleaded with her to stay, and family lore has it that she took the last Cubana Airlines flight out of Idlewild Airport.

5. I can't begin to tell you how often I heard my mother softly cry, Hay Cuba, como te extraño—Oh Cuba, how I miss you, how I long for you. That longing for Havana, for its sea wall along the Malecón—it colored my childhood. I finally walked the Malecón four years ago.
6. I was overwhelmed with emotion when I arrived at José Martí Airport. The ghosts of my grandparents, who finally left Cuba for good two years after I was born with one small suitcase between them, haunted me. I thought about how they shut the door of their home on almost three decades of life and set out for yet another migration. I went to their house in old Havana. I finally saw the marble stairs I had heard so much about. I saw the heavy wooden door my grandfather still had the keys to in his last exile. He carried those keys until the day he died, believing he was going back to Cuba. The current occupants were kind enough to let me in for a look. They wouldn't take the money I offered them for their hospitality. They told me this was my home too, and I broke down and cried in front of them. Hay Cuba, como te extraño—Oh Cuba, how I missed you.
7. Mr. President, you will undoubtedly notice that Havana is like an aging beauty queen. So is my mother who is now marooned in a nursing home wheelchair. When she calls me to tell me that you are in her city, she can barely contain her excitement. Wistfully, she asks me if she will again see a Havana without a Castro in power before she dies. All I can tell her is that you made a return to her country feasible. No matter how remote the possibility that her health will allow her to go back, you have given her hope. Se lo agradezco, and I thank you with all my heart and soul that you have opened up prospects for peace with Cuba for my children.
8. Felicitaciones [Congratulations],
9. Judy Bolton-Fasman

4. PART A: Did the author’s grandfather visit Cuba again after he migrated to the United States?

PART B: Read paragraph 6 below, and underline the sentence that gives you the answer.

I was overwhelmed with emotion when I arrived at José Martí Airport. The ghosts of my grandparents, who finally left Cuba for good two years after I was born with one small suitcase between them, haunted me. I thought about how they shut the door of their home on almost three decades of life and set out for yet another migration. I went to their house in old Havana. I finally saw the marble stairs I had heard so much about. I saw the heavy wooden door my grandfather still had the keys to in his last exile. He carried those keys until the day he died, believing he was going back to Cuba. The current occupants were kind enough to let me in for a look. They wouldn’t take the money I offered them for their hospitality. They told me this was my home too, and I broke down and cried in front of them. Hay Cuba, como te estrañe—Oh Cuba, how I missed you.

5. Read the following sentence from paragraph 7.

Mr. President, you will undoubtedly notice that Havana is like an aging beauty queen.

Which point is the author making by including this sentence?

  - C. Havana needs to be torn down and completely rebuilt.
  - D. Havana is the most beautiful city in the world.
6. Which sentence best summarizes the author’s letter?
- A. The author is disappointed that the president did not immediately call for the ouster of the Cuban dictator.
  - B. The author hopes she will be able to accompany the president on his next trip to Cuba.
  - C. The author is thrilled that her family will be able to recover the money and property Castro’s government stole from them.
  - D. The author is excited to think that one day relations between the United States and Cuba will improve and her family will be able to visit their homeland.

“Where the Sun and Moon Came From: A Cuban Legend”

1. After the great flood, all the Indians of the Islands feared to build huts, so they dwelt in caves. There were not many people because all excepting the wise Cacique and his wives and sons had been drowned in the flood. The wise Cacique was not drowned, for he had built a great canoe and put into it his whole family and many creatures besides. He had done so because the Behique had warned him that a great rain was coming and had told him to build the strong canoe.
2. As there were not many people when the waters had returned to the sea and left the land dry, there were grottoes enough for them all to live in and also for the spirits that dwelt in caves, waiting until they were called out into the light and air. But the grottoes in which men lived were not deep hidden at the edge of the sea as were the caves inhabited by spirits. In one of the deepest caves lived the Sun and the Moon: it was called the cave Jobaba. From this place none of the bright beams of the Sun nor the soft light of the Moon could breach the earth; only the stars shone in the sky.
3. At last the Sun and Moon became tired of the cave. There was, indeed, scarcely room for both of them in that grotto, and the light they made was so great it blinded even themselves. It was the Sun who first grew impatient; his glory hurt him because he was so close to it, and he did not think of anything but how he could be more comfortable. Said he to the Moon:
4. “It is not fitting that I who am the father of all life and who may command all the spirits that are in the caves should be shut up this way with another luminary, even one so small and weak as you are. You ought to go away and leave this cave to me; I can easily fill it all.”
5. “But where shall I go?” asked the Moon anxiously; “there is no other cave for me.”
6. “Well, there is the biggest cave of all not yet full,” answered the sun. “There is the huge blue cave of the sky. The stars don’t need so much space; there is plenty of room for you. Why don’t you go out and light it up? Try!”

7. Eventually the Moon left the cave, but the Sun became lonely and began to miss the Moon. So the Sun left the cave in search of the Moon.
8. “Oh, Moon!” he cried. “Where are you going? Why do you fly when I am coming? Dear Moon, do not go away again!”
9. But the Moon would not listen and would not linger. As the sun plunged into the cave thinking that if he were within she might return, she mounted high in the clear sky.
10. Since that time the Sun has never been able to overtake the Moon or to persuade her to remain very near him. Sometimes she turns her cold, sweet profile toward him for a little, and once in a great while she dares to turn her back upon him and pass silently before his face, but she never lingers; she will not dwell with him... The Moon sleeps through the day, and when the Sun comes at evening to take his slumber, she has already started on her nightly rounds. Nevertheless, she often looks sad under her silver veil, for never can she forget that she was driven from her home.

Questions

7. PART A: Why weren't there many people living on the islands at the beginning of the story?
- A. Most of the people did not want to live in caves.
  - B. Most of the people had been killed in a great flood.
  - C. They sailed away when they learned of the flood.
  - D. There wasn't room for many people on the islands.

PART B: Underline the sentence in paragraph 2 that shows the sky was always dark after the flood had ended.

As there were not many people when the waters had returned to the sea and left the land dry, there were grottoes enough for them all to live in and also for the spirits that dwelt in caves, waiting until they were called out into the light and air. But the grottoes in which men lived were not deep hidden at the edge of the sea as were the caves inhabited by spirits. In one of the deepest caves lived the Sun and the Moon: it was called the cave Jobaba. From this place none of the bright beams of the Sun nor the soft light of the Moon could breach the earth; only the stars shone in the sky.

8. PART A: Why did the Sun demand that the Moon leave the cave?
- A. The cave was too crowded for both of them, and the Sun was uncomfortable.
  - B. The Sun and the Moon were bitter enemies, and the Sun hated living with the Moon.
  - C. The Sun was jealous of the Moon because the Moon was so much more beautiful.
  - D. The Moon was very noisy, which prevented the Sun from getting any rest.

PART B: Which words best describe the Sun's personality in paragraphs 3 and 4?

- A. spiteful and angry
- B. impulsive and foolish
- C. charming and kind
- D. boastful and rude

9. How did the Moon react when the Sun asked her to leave the cave?

- A. She was worried.
- B. She was enraged.
- C. She was annoyed.
- D. She was resentful.

10. Read the following sentence from paragraph 9.

But the Moon would not listen and would not linger.

What is the meaning of the word linger?

- A. to give attention to someone or something
- B. to stay in a place longer than necessary
- C. to act in a friendly way toward someone
- D. to feel bitterness about something

11. Why did the Sun go searching for the Moon? Explain why the Moon never allowed the Sun to catch up to her.
