Variations of a 10-K are often filed to indicate amendments and changes. Most publicly held companies also publish an "annual report" that is not on Form 10-K. These annual reports are more informal and are frequently used by a company to enhance its image with customers, investors and industry peers.

INTRODUCTION

PLUNKETT'S AIRLINE, HOTEL & TRAVEL INDUSTRY ALMANAC, the seventh edition of our guide to the travel and tourism field, is designed to be used as a general source for researchers of all types.

The data and areas of interest covered are intentionally broad, ranging from the costs and effectiveness of the airline sector, to emerging technology, to an in-depth look at the major firms (which we call "THE TRAVEL 300") within the many industry sectors that make up the travel and tourism system.

This reference book is designed to be a general source for researchers. It is especially intended to assist with market research, strategic planning, employment searches, contact or prospect list creation (be sure to see the export capabilities of the accompanying CD-ROM that is available to book and eBook buyers) and financial research, and as a data resource for executives and students of all types.

PLUNKETT'S AIRLINE, HOTEL & TRAVEL INDUSTRY ALMANAC takes a rounded approach for the general reader. This book presents a complete overview of the entire travel, lodging and tourism system (see "How To Use This Book"). For example, you will find trends in airline and hotel markets, along with easy-to-use charts and tables on all facets of travel in general, from growth in the cruise line industry to the number of airline passengers flying yearly.

THE TRAVEL 300 is our unique grouping of the biggest, most successful corporations in all segments of the global travel and tourism industry. Tens of thousands of pieces of information, gathered from a wide variety of sources, have been researched and are presented in a unique form that can be easily understood. This section includes thorough indexes to THE TRAVEL 300, by geography, industry, sales, brand names, subsidiary names and many other topics. (See Chapter 4.)

Especially helpful is the way in which PLUNKETT'S AIRLINE, HOTEL & TRAVEL INDUSTRY ALMANAC enables readers who have no business background to readily compare the financial records and growth plans of large travel companies and major industry groups. You'll see the mid-term financial record of each firm, along with the impact of earnings, sales and strategic plans on each company's potential to fuel growth, serve new markets and provide investment and employment opportunities.

No other source provides this book's easy-to-understand comparisons of growth, expenditures, technologies, passengers, corporations and many other items of great importance to people of all types who may be studying this, one of the largest industries in the world today.

By scanning the data groups and the unique indexes, you can find the best information to fit your personal research needs. The major growth companies in travel and tourism are profiled and then ranked using several different groups of specific criteria. Which firms are the biggest employers? Which companies earn the most profits? These things and much more are easy to find.

In addition to individual company profiles, an overview of travel markets and trends is provided. This book's job is to help you sort through easy-to-understand summaries of today's trends in a quick and effective manner.

Whatever your purpose for researching the travel and tourism field, you'll find this book to be a valuable guide. Nonetheless, as is true with all resources, this volume has limitations that the reader should be aware of:

- Financial data and other corporate information can change quickly. A book of this type can be no more current than the data that was available as of the time of editing. Consequently, the financial picture, management and ownership of the firm(s) you are studying may have changed since the date of this book. For example, this almanac includes the most up-to-date sales figures and profits available to the editors as of mid 2009. That means that we have typically used corporate financial data as of the end of 2008.
- Corporate mergers, acquisitions and downsizing are occurring at a very rapid rate. Such events may have created significant change, subsequent to the publishing of this book, within a company you are studying.
- Some of the companies in THE TRAVEL 300 are so large in scope, and in variety of business endeavors conducted within a parent organization, that we have been unable to completely list all subsidiaries, affiliations, divisions and activities within a firm's corporate structure.
- This volume is intended to be a general guide to a vast global industry. That means that researchers should look to this book for an overview and, when conducting in-depth research, should contact the specific corporations or industry associations in question for the very latest changes and data. Where possible, we have listed contact names, toll-free telephone numbers and Internet sites for the companies, government agencies and industry associations involved so that the reader may get further details without unnecessary delay.

- Tables of industry data and statistics used in this book include the latest numbers available at the time of printing, generally through the end of 2008. In a few cases, the only complete data available was for earlier years.
- We have used exhaustive efforts to locate and fairly present accurate and complete data. However, when using this book or any other source for business and industry information, the reader should use caution and diligence by conducting further research where it seems appropriate. We wish you success in your endeavors, and we trust that your experience with this book will be both satisfactory and productive.

Individual Data Listings:

Look at one of the companies in THE TRAVEL 300’s Individual Data Listings. You’ll find the following information fields:

Company Name:

The company profiles are in alphabetical order by company name. If you don’t find the company you are seeking, it may be a subsidiary or division of one of the firms covered in this book. Try looking it up in the Index by Subsidiaries, Brand Names and Selected Affiliations in the back of the book.

Ranks:

Industry Group Code: An NAIC code used to group companies within like segments. (See Chapter 4 for a list of codes.)

Ranks Within This Company's Industry Group:
Ranks, within this firm's segment only, for annual sales and annual profits, with 1 being the highest rank.

Business Activities:

A grid arranged into six major industry categories and several sub-categories. A "Y" indicates that the firm operates within the sub-category. A complete Index by Industry is included in the beginning of Chapter 4.

Types of Business:

A listing of the primary types of business specialties conducted by the firm.

Brands/Divisions/Affiliations:

Major brand names, operating divisions or subsidiaries of the firm, as well as major corporate affiliations—such as another firm that owns a significant portion of the company's stock. A complete Index by Subsidiaries, Brand Names and Selected Affiliations is in the back of the book.

Contacts:

The names and titles up to 27 top officers of the company are listed, including human resources contacts.

Address:

The firm's full headquarters address, the headquarters telephone, plus toll-free and fax numbers where available. Also provided is the Internet site address.

Financials:

Annual Sales (2008 or the latest fiscal year available to the editors, plus up to four previous years): These are stated in thousands of dollars (add three zeros if you want the full number). This figure represents consolidated worldwide sales from all operations. 2008 figures may be estimates or may be for only part of the year—partial year figures are appropriately footnoted.

Annual Profits (2008 or the latest fiscal year available to the editors, plus up to four previous years): These are stated in thousands of dollars (add three zeros if you want the full number). This figure represents consolidated, after-tax net profit from all operations. 2008 figures may be estimates.

Stock Ticker, International Exchange, Parent Company: When available, the unique stock market symbol used to identify this firm's common stock for trading and tracking purposes is indicated. Where appropriate, this field may contain "private" or "subsidiary" rather than a ticker symbol. If the firm is a publicly-held company headquartered outside of the U.S., its international ticker and exchange are given.

If the firm is a subsidiary, its parent company is listed.

Total Number of Employees: The approximate total number of employees, worldwide, as of the end of 2008 (or the latest data available to the editors).

Apparent Salaries/Benefits:

(The following descriptions generally apply to U.S. employers only.)

A "Y" in appropriate fields indicates "Yes."

Due to wide variations in the manner in which corporations report benefits to the U.S. Government's regulatory bodies, not all plans will have been uncovered or correctly evaluated during our effort to research this data. Also, the availability to employees of such plans will vary according to the qualifications that employees must meet to become eligible. For example, some benefit plans may be available only to salaried workers—others only to employees who work more than 1,000 hours yearly. Benefits that are available to employees of the main or parent company may not be available to employees of the subsidiaries. In addition, employers frequently alter the nature and terms of plans offered.

NOTE: Generally, employees covered by wealth-building benefit plans do not fully own ("vest in") funds contributed on their behalf by the employer until as many as five years of service with that employer have passed. All pension plans are voluntary—that is, employers are not obligated to offer pensions.

Pension Plan: The firm offers a pension plan to qualified employees. In this case, in order for a "Y" to appear, the editors believe that the employer offers a defined benefit or cash balance pension plan (see discussions below). The type and generosity of these plans vary widely from firm to firm. Caution: Some employers refer to plans as "pension" or "retirement" plans when they are actually 401(k) savings plans that require a contribution by the employee.

- Defined Benefit Pension Plans: Pension plans that do not require a contribution from the employee are infrequently offered. However, a few companies, particularly larger employers in high-profit-margin industries, offer defined benefit pension plans where the employee is guaranteed to receive a set pension benefit upon retirement. The amount of the benefit is determined by the years of service with the company and the employee's salary during the later years of employment. The longer a person works for the employer, the higher the retirement benefit. These defined benefit plans are funded entirely by the employer. The benefits, up to a reasonable limit, are guaranteed by the Federal Government's Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. These plans are not portable—if you leave the company, you cannot transfer your benefits into a different plan. Instead, upon retirement you will receive the benefits that vested during your service with the company. If your employer offers a pension plan, it must give you a summary plan description within 90 days of the date you join the plan. You can also request a summary annual report of the plan, and once every 12 months you may request an individual benefit statement accounting of your interest in the plan.

- Defined Contribution Plans: These are quite different. They do not guarantee a certain amount of pension benefit. Instead, they set out circumstances under which the employer will make a contribution to a plan on your behalf. The most common example is the 401(k) savings plan. Pension benefits are not guaranteed under these plans.
- Cash Balance Pension Plans: These plans were recently invented. These are hybrid plans—part defined benefit and part defined contribution. Many employers have converted their older defined benefit plans into cash balance plans. The employer makes deposits (or credits a given amount of money) on the employee's behalf, usually based on a percentage of pay. Employee accounts grow based on a predetermined interest benchmark, such as the interest rate on Treasury Bonds. There are some advantages to these plans, particularly for younger workers: a) The benefits, up to a reasonable limit, are guaranteed by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. b) Benefits are portable—they can be moved to another plan when the employee changes companies. c) Younger workers and those who spend a shorter number of years with an employer may receive higher benefits than they would under a traditional defined benefit plan.

ESOP Stock Plan (Employees' Stock Ownership Plan): This type of plan is in wide use. Typically, the plan borrows money from a bank and uses those funds to purchase a large block of the corporation's stock. The corporation makes contributions to the plan over a period of time, and the stock purchase loan is eventually paid off. The value of the plan grows significantly as long as the market price of the stock holds up. Qualified employees are allocated a share of the plan based on their length of service and their level of salary. Under federal regulations, participants in ESOPs are allowed to diversify their account holdings in set percentages that rise as the employee ages and gains years of service with the company. In this manner, not all of the employee's assets are tied up in the employer's stock.

Savings Plan, 401(k): Under this type of plan, employees make a tax-deferred deposit into an account. In the best plans, the company makes annual matching donations to the employees' accounts, typically in some proportion to deposits made by the employees themselves. A good plan will match one-half of employee deposits of up to 6% of wages. For example, an employee earning $30,000 yearly might deposit $1,800 (6%) into the plan. The company will match one-half of the employee's deposit, or $900. The plan grows on a tax-deferred basis, similar to an IRA. A very generous plan will match 100% of employee deposits. However, some plans do not call for the employer to make a matching deposit at all. Other plans call for a matching contribution to be made at the discretion of the firm's board of directors. Actual terms of these plans vary widely from firm to firm. Generally, these savings plans allow employees to deposit as much as 15% of salary into the plan on a tax-deferred basis. However, the portion that the company uses to calculate its matching deposit is generally limited to a maximum of 6%. Employees should take care to diversify the holdings in their 401(k) accounts, and most people should seek professional guidance or investment management for their accounts.

Stock Purchase Plan: Qualified employees may purchase the company's common stock at a price below its market value under a specific plan. Typically, the employee is limited to investing a small percentage of wages in this plan. The discount may range from 5 to 15%. Some of these plans allow for deposits to be made through regular monthly payroll deductions. However, new accounting rules for corporations, along with other factors, are leading many companies to curtail these plans—dropping the discount allowed, cutting the maximum yearly stock purchase or otherwise making the plans less generous or appealing.

Profit Sharing: Qualified employees are awarded an annual amount equal to some portion of a company's profits. In a very generous plan, the pool of money awarded to employees would be 15% of profits. Typically, this money is deposited into a long-term retirement account. Caution: Some employers refer to plans as "profit sharing" when they are actually 401(k) savings plans. True profit sharing plans are rarely offered.

Highest Executive Salary: The highest executive salary paid, typically a 2008 amount (or the latest year available to the editors) and typically paid to the Chief Executive Officer.

Highest Executive Bonus: The apparent bonus, if any, paid to the above person.

Second Highest Executive Salary: The next-highest executive salary paid, typically a 2008 amount (or the latest year available to the editors) and typically paid to the President or Chief Operating Officer.

Second Highest Executive Bonus: The apparent bonus, if any, paid to the above person.

Other Thoughts:

Apparent Women Officers or Directors: It is difficult to obtain this information on an exact basis, and employers generally do not disclose the data in a public way. However, we have indicated what our best efforts reveal to be the apparent number of women who either are in the posts of corporate officers or sit on the board of directors. There is a wide variance from company to company.

Hot Spot for Advancement for Women/Minorities: A “Y” in appropriate fields indicates “Yes.” These are firms that appear either to have posted a substantial number of women and/or minorities to high posts or that appear to have a good record of going out of their way to recruit, train, promote and retain women or minorities. (See the Index of Hot Spots For Women and Minorities in the back of the book.) This information may change frequently and can be difficult to obtain and verify. Consequently, the reader should use caution and conduct further investigation where appropriate.

Growth Plans/ Special Features:

Listed here are observations regarding the firm’s strategy, hiring plans, plans for growth and product development, along with general information regarding a company’s business and prospects.

Locations:

A “Y” in the appropriate field indicates “Yes.”

Primary locations outside of the headquarters, categorized by regions of the United States and by international locations. A complete index by locations is also in the front of this chapter.

1) Introduction to the Travel Industry

The 2009-2010 period finds the travel industry continuing to face challenging times. Consumers' budgets are tight, and they are cutting down on unnecessary expenses. When the middle class does take a vacation, it is on a reduced budget. Meanwhile, corporate and business travel budgets are tight as well. The travel industry is acutely aware of this problem. Most airlines have cut routes and reduced the total number of seats available, partly by removing older, fuel-guzzling aircraft from service. Travel providers of nearly all types are competing fiercely on price or are offering their customers special inducements and packages.

The U.S. Travel Association (USTA) estimated total U.S. travel expenditures at $772.9 billion for 2008, $739.4 billion in 2007 and $699.8 in 2006. According to the World Travel & Tourism Council (WTTC), the global travel and tourism industry supported 77.2 million jobs on a direct basis in 2009 (a 1.9% decline from 2008), generating $1.87 trillion in direct global revenues (a 3.5% decline from 2008, and an amount representing about 3.2% of total global GDP). The WTTC forecasts real annual revenue growth averaging 3.6% between 2009 and 2019, boosting the 2019 total to $3.39 trillion.

The WTTC also prepares an estimate of the total effect of travel and tourism on GDP (gross domestic product), including both direct and indirect revenues. On that basis, the group estimates the total impact of the industry on global GDP at $5.47 trillion or 9.4% of global GDP for 2009.

In the WTTC's figures, the U.S. accounted for $1.64 trillion in direct plus indirect travel expenditures in 2009, followed by Japan at $551 billion and China at $526 billion. China is the market to watch, with 100 million Chinese expected to travel to foreign lands in 2018.

IATA, the international association that represents most of the world's major airlines, projected a global airline industry net loss at $9 billion for 2009, after a net loss of $10.4 billion in 2008 and a net profit of $12.9 billion in 2007.

The 2008-2009 period was an ugly time for airlines. Many airlines took bankruptcy protection in 2008, including Frontier, and some, such as Aloha Airlines and ATA, once major airlines in Hawaii and elsewhere, were forced to discontinue operations altogether. Several specialty and business-class-only airlines ceased operations, including MAXjet, Eos and Skybus. Government-controlled Alitalia, in Italy, took bankruptcy in August 2008.

Hotels throughout the world enjoyed a major boom through mid 2007, with high occupancy levels, rising room rates and strong levels of both business and leisure travelers. However, the global financial crisis put a damper on hotel occupancy that continued into 2008 and 2009. Many major hotel construction projects have been cancelled or put on hold.

E-commerce continues to play an extremely important role in the travel sector, making booking convenient for consumers and more cost-effective for travel providers. However, online travel booking sites like Orbitz and Expedia face tough competition. Today, airlines and hotel chains are offering their own powerful online reservation systems, with rich features, multiple levels of photos and descriptions, and the ability to earn and manage frequent flyer awards. Consumers often find the lowest prices on sites operated directly by airlines and hotels.

The cruise line business has held up relatively well in the onset of the financial crisis, particularly at the largest cruise lines. However, these companies often offer deep discounts today in order to fill cabins. Consumers see cruises as high-value package deals, and cruise ships are nearly full.

2) Discount Airlines Set the Standard But Face Economic Challenges

As discount airlines have set the standard for air travel for the past decade or so, their success has caused important changes in the industry. Southwest Airlines jumped to the number one spot of the top 10 U.S. carriers in 2004 based on domestic enplanements (more than 81 million), and regained the lead from American Airlines in 2007 with 101.9 passengers flown (both domestically and internationally) in 2007, compared to American's 98.1 million.

For years, Southwest and its no-frills business model have enjoyed tremendous success, wooing customers based on price, not perks. Its single-plane platform (Boeing's 737) keeps maintenance costs low, while its point-to-point flying system has helped to give it a solid reputation in on-time performance. Meanwhile, Southwest has led the industry in intricate hedging techniques that help to shield it from rising fuel costs.

In late-2008, Southwest announced a profit for the 71st straight quarter (excluding special items) while the other major airlines collectively lost money, largely due to fewer passengers. Up until mid-2008, fuel hedging had a major impact on Southwest's market dominance. Its fuel hedges covered 80% of its fuel purchases (in 2008, more than 70% of its fuel was purchased at a price equivalent to $51 a barrel for crude oil, which was extremely advantageous). The airline was not immune to rising costs, as its fuel expenses rose by 35% in the second quarter of 2008 despite its hedges. However, Southwest was by far the best prepared airline when it comes to weathering high fuel costs.

By late 2008 when oil prices entered a freefall, hedging practices cost major airlines hundreds of millions. In October 2008, United Airlines reported losses of $779 million in the third quarter because of a noncash charge reflecting the losses of its hedging contracts for fuel. For fiscal 2008, United's overall loss exceeded $5.3 billion. Even Southwest took a hit, losing $120 million in the third quarter and $56 million in the fourth quarter, its first losses in 17 years. 2008 profits for Southwest fell to $178 million, down from $645 million in 2007. As of mid-2009, Southwest managed to report a profit of $59 million for the second quarter, despite the fact that passenger traffic in the quarter declined slightly from the same quarter in 2008.

In general terms, Southwest is facing tough competition in the form of newer discount airlines such as JetBlue. Although JetBlue has only a fraction of the fleet that Southwest boasts (at the end of 2008, it had 142 planes to Southwest's 537), it was, up until recently, in rapid expansion mode, adding new planes and new markets. Meanwhile, the fact that JetBlue's fleet is relatively new means that its maintenance costs are low.

JetBlue offers soft leather seats and satellite TV. Southwest redecorated its fleet in response. JetBlue also offers assigned seating, which has great appeal for those tired of rushing to line up at Southwest's gates for its cattle-call seating (it must be noted that Southwest was considering switching to assigned seating in 2008, but implemented a numbered boarding system instead, letting passengers board by groups based on the order in which passengers check in).

According to founder David Neeleman, JetBlue aims to "bring humanity back to air travel." However, JetBlue is learning a tough lesson when it comes to the challenges of rapid growth, and the cost of skimping on investment in logistics. Plagued by ice storms in early 2007, the airline's lack of communication between its ground crews and flight crews resulted in delays of up to 11 hours with passengers trapped on board while planes sat on frozen tarmacs. Outraged passengers and some legislators called for regulatory changes that would guarantee certain passenger rights during times of severe service delays. JetBlue responded by announcing plans to upgrade its communications systems, adjust flight schedules ahead of bad weather reports and publish a "Customer Bill of Rights" outlining provisions for passenger compensation when flights are delayed or cancelled. Any way you look at it, this was a customer service blunder on the grandest scale, and JetBlue received immense negative publicity.

Both JetBlue and Southwest are making attempts to attract more business travelers, which heretofore have not made up the bulk of their passengers. Both are offering fully refundable fares which can be changed without penalty when business travelers' schedules shift. Also, both are working to offer in-flight Internet access which has powerful appeal to business travelers because they can work while flying. Southwest launched "business select" fares in 2007. These fares afford business travelers to board Southwest aircraft first for priority seating for an additional charge. Additional perks included in Business Select are a complimentary beverage, additional frequent flyer credits and expedited security lines at participating airports. Southwest hopes to earn an additional $100 million per year through the added revenue from Business Select fares.

For full-service carriers, international travel affords them an added boost. Thus far, U.S. discount carriers have largely confined their operations to domestic travel, leaving international flights to the full-service airlines. However, JetBlue, Spirit and AirTran are offering tourist destinations like the Bahamas, Jamaica, Costa Rica, Aruba and the Dominican Republic, and may soon fly even further a field.

Nonetheless, the fact that major "legacy" airlines offer extensive global flight schedules to Asia/Pacific, South America, Europe and beyond offers an opportunity for airlines like American and Continental to truly differentiate themselves, especially given the fact that their full-service domestic flights can connect smoothly with their international flights at major hubs. Legacy airlines are earning a significant portion of their net profits off international routes. Their ability to lure business travelers with first or business class seats, airline clubs and destination lounges that offer showers and changing rooms give them significant competitive advantage.

Meanwhile, dozens of relatively new discount airlines, based on the Southwest and JetBlue model, have sprung up worldwide. RyanAir and EasyJet are setting the standard for discount operations in much of Europe. RyanAir is being especially aggressive in its cost-cutting efforts and increasing revenue by eliminating seat back pockets to lower weight and cleaning costs; eliminating airport check-in; banning checked baggage altogether; and selling 98% of its tickets via its web site. In 2009, RyanAir also announced plans to offer online gambling on its planes to generate further revenue.

Virgin America, partly owned by U.K.-based Virgin Group, began service from San Francisco and Los Angeles to New York in 2007. Virgin America offers low-cost seats, plus a first class section.

Seating areas include mood lighting, seat-back entertainment screens, electric power plugs at each seat, and a clean, modern look. However, Virgin America had a rocky start, losing $227 million in its first year of operation.

In India, Southeast Asia and elsewhere, new discount airlines have formed by the dozen. Meanwhile, the Mexican Government has privatized its two national airlines, opening up the Mexican market to competition for the first time; competitive fares may be blossoming as a result.

By early 2008, the slowing global economy brought about severe reversals in discount airlines' growth plans. Faced with fluctuating fuel costs and dwindling passenger numbers, all of the carriers, including Southwest, are scaling back. At AirTran, capacity was to be reduced by 5% by the end of 2008 while delivery of 18 Boeing aircraft has been deferred. JetBlue also deferred delivery of 21 Airbus planes and suspended existing and planned service to a number of cities including Los Angeles, Nashville and Tucson. Meanwhile, Southwest was cutting about 6% of its flight schedule in late 2008. It is also cutting its fleet expansion in half, with plans to acquire only 14 new 737s in 2009.

Poorly financed discount airlines have been forced into bankruptcy in recent months, including ATA, Frontier, Zoom and Skybus.

3) Global Airlines Face Daunting Challenges

The commercial airline industry has always been particularly vulnerable to economic and political changes. In times of crisis, people travel less while fuel may cost more. The deregulation of the U.S. airline industry in 1978 was a watershed event that led to intense price competition, and several factors conspired in recent years to make the goal of profitability ever more difficult for major airlines to achieve. The stock market crash of 2000, the tragedy of 9/11, rapidly rising fuel costs and intense competition, among other problems, bankrupted several airlines and threatened many more with similar fates. By late 2008 when the global economic crisis hit in earnest, global airlines were awash in losses.

The International Air Transport Association or IATA (which represents 230 airlines or 93% of scheduled air traffic) estimated losses among global airlines for 2008 of about $10.4 billion, and another $9 billion in losses for 2009. In 2008, a number of carriers ceased operations including ATA, Aloha Airlines and ExpressJet. In years past, airlines such as United, Delta and Northwest were awarded bankruptcy protection during which they were able to reorganize and cut costs. In the current market, lenders are less likely to finance ailing airlines, which may leave liquidation as the only alternative. The likely outcome will be a number of airline failures.

Airlines are already scrambling to cut costs and increase revenue. Capacity cuts taking effect in September 2009 will drop domestic seat capacity on U.S. flights to 66.5 million, down from the industry's peak of 84 million in 2001. Delta is scaling back its foreign capacity by 15% by the end of 2009 (compared to 2008), bringing its total network capacity down by 10% overall. At American Airlines, capacity will be down by 7.5% by the end of 2009.

Total employment at American carriers, as of April 2009, was 583,030, down from 2007's 624,372 and down 24% from the all time high in May 2001. Meanwhile, United, Delta and US Airways, among others, are charging passengers for many services. As of April 2008, five airlines began charging $25 to check a second piece of luggage and still more for a third. US Airways, American and United now charge $15 to check one piece of luggage. On board, passengers are paying for drinks, meals and even pillows and blankets. United hopes to accrue as much as $1 billion per year from the so-called "ancillary" charges. As of mid-2009, Continental was the only hold-out in charging for onboard amenities, although it does charge to check a second bag.

Southwest has given traditional, full-service airlines an important model from which to learn when it comes to cutting costs: use fewer types of aircraft to keep maintenance and repair costs low, cut labor costs, design more efficient routing, purchase oil futures to hedge fuel costs and keep customers coming back with low prices, not perks. This model has allowed Southwest to boast some of the industry's cheapest costs per passenger mile.

The low-fare model has given major airlines food for thought, and many have made big changes in order to improve efficiency and financial results. While the hub-and-spoke system that is the defining characteristic of full-service airlines is unlikely to go away anytime soon (it still may be the most efficient way to service some small- to medium-sized markets), more airlines are moving toward a "rolling-hub" concept. Rather than having clusters of planes wait around at airports for passengers, airlines are increasingly spacing flights at longer intervals, forcing passengers to wait for planes, rather than the other way around. The rolling-hub concept allows airlines to maximize passenger loads and increase the number of hours their aircraft fly per day and use staff more efficiently. Previously, airlines had many flights arriving and taking off within about 45 minutes of each other. In that manner, travelers had minimal waits when they changed aircraft at hubs to fly on to their final destinations. However, this system required large numbers of gate and baggage personnel who often were idle for long periods between groups of flights. With the rolling hub model, fewer gate personnel are kept on hand and passengers often wait up to two hours for their connecting flights.

More and more, airlines are being forced to manage their fuel costs aggressively. For example, all new aircraft purchased by most airlines feature special upswept wing tips that are designed to reduce fuel consumption by 3% to 4%. Some airlines taxi on one engine, connect to gate power sources when parked and rely on expert market analysts for advice on when and how to purchase fuel.

Airlines have also been shaving salaries when possible, through extensive negotiations with labor unions. The median salary for commercial jet pilots as of March 2009 was $78,547 according to PayScale, Inc., down from approximately $250,000 in 2003. Pension benefits have been cut, and many employees are looking at monthly retirement pay that is one-half or less of what was expected in better times.

Like their U.S. counterparts, many global carriers have slashed costs and undertaken massive restructurings in the face of the losses at the end of 2001 and the SARS crisis in 2003. Their efforts paid off for a time. For example, the merged Air France-KLM Group posted relatively steady profits of $1.2 billion in 2006 and $1.19 billion in 2007 (however, profits fell to $996 million in 2008, partly due to fuel costs).

The global economic crisis has put an end to the boom in the Middle East. Emirates, for example, is facing a freefall in the number of visitors to its headquarters city of Dubai, which is suffering from falling oil prices, decreasing tourism and a real estate glut.

India's airlines, including Kingfisher Airlines and Jet Airways, have suffered major losses, and responded by cutting routes and laying off pilots as of early 2009. After record growth since 2003 when the Indian government opened the market to private carriers, industry analysts projected losses of $2 billion in 2008.

By March 2009, airlines were facing such slow demand that they once again found themselves in fare wars, slashing ticket prices aggressively. Meanwhile, passenger counts on international routes were falling in 2009 as well. This is a particularly tough blow, since airlines such as American had enjoyed excellent profits on their overseas routes and had added both capacity and expensive passenger comfort features.

4) International Airlines Try to Lure Passengers with In-flight Perks

Even air travel's cash cow, premium overseas ticket sales, is feeling the crunch of the economic crisis. In May 2009, the IATA reported that global demand for first class and business class seats was down 26% from May 2008. May 2009 was the 12th consecutive month of year-on-year declines for those seats. Carriers are responding by slashing fares. Even the New York-London route, which once averaged about $8,800 for a round trip business class ticket, can be purchased for as little as $2,500 with an advance purchase.

Some corporate decision makers still argue that the rest and relaxation afforded in business class cabins on airlines and in upscale hotels are worth the expense on long-distance trips, since employees are better rested and better able to do their jobs on the road.

As competition increases, so do the perks. British Airways, American, Continental and other competitors have added flat, or nearly-flat, lie-down seats. Airlines are hiring famous chefs to create ritzy in-flight menus. At Singapore Airlines, for example, celebrity chef Gordon Ramsay's name is on the menus. United Airlines works with Charlie Trotter. American Airlines boasts Dean Fearing and Stephen Pyles.

Long-haul travel, meaning flights of 12 hours or more, is on the rise. Singapore Airlines, Emirates and Cathay Pacific offer super-long flights that cross the globe. Now, non-stop flights are available, up to 18.5 hours on Singapore Airlines' service from Newark, New Jersey to Singapore.

To make the hours in the air more bearable, all of these carriers have instituted perks such as roomier seats, expanded business class cabins, expanded flight crews and food and entertainment on demand. Take Singapore Airlines, for example. It flies A340-500 jets configured to have a mere 181 seats, despite the fact that the plane is capable of seating 313. There are 117 seats in economy class that feature greater legroom (37 inches of pitch) and larger television screens on the back of each seat (each measures 9.3 inches). Business class has also been expanded to 64 seats. Both classes have their own lounges offering snacks, drinks and magazines throughout the flights.

At British Airways, its Club World business class introduced beds that are 25% wider than before and stretch to six feet when flat. The airline claims that the seat is six feet six inches when it is configured in an ergonomic "Z" position. In addition, the section has a Club Kitchen which has anytime access.

SPOTLIGHT: All Business Class Carriers Falter

As of mid-2008, nearly every independent carrier betting on all-business class jets to lure corporate travelers had gone out of business. MaxJet folded in 2007 and Eos and Silverjet shut down in 2008 due to poor sales. While the concept of spacious cabins, premium amenities and exclusive service sells, it must be backed up with easy flight connections and frequent flyer clubs, perks that carriers devoted strictly to all business class didn't have. Eos, for example, reconfigured its fleet of three Boeing 757s from 220 seats to just 48 seats. Each afforded a passenger 21 square feet of space including a seat that converted to a flat bed and an ottoman where fellow passengers or crew could sit for conversation. Food and beverage service received high marks as well. The problem was that Eos flew into and out of Stansted Airport, which is 34 miles outside London, making connections extremely difficult.

All business class appears to be a viable business model if it's offered within the framework of a larger, full-service airline. In 2008, Singapore Airlines converted five Airbus A340-500 jets to all business class seating for its lucrative non-stop routes between Singapore and New York and Singapore and Los Angeles. The jets have been reconfigured to just 100 flat-bed seats with privacy pods and aisle access. Passengers wanting to fly economy class on those routes must fly a Boeing 747 or 777 and make a connection.

Meanwhile, independent all business class carrier L'Avion tried to make a go of it with three daily flights from Paris Orly to New York JFK (one in partnership with British Airways' transatlantic multi-class subsidiary OpenSkies). L'Avion was acquired by OpenSkies 2008. Las Vegas Nevada-based charter airline Primaris hoped to launch all-business service within the U.S. in 2010 but filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in 2008.

First-class luxury is being taken to a new level on Emirates' flights to Dubai in the United Arab Emirates (UAE). The United Arab Emirates carrier offers 12 first class "suites," each with 5'6" louvered doors that can be closed for complete privacy while in flight. First class passengers phone flight attendants to order food and drink, and choose from 500 channels of on-demand entertainment. First class passengers on Emirates new Airbus 380 enjoy commercial flight's first onboard showers. The cost for all this pampering? Round trip first class fares from New York to Dubai are about $16,000, according to the Emirates web site. In comparison, business class is about $8,600. The flight takes about 13 hours outbound from New York JFK to Dubai, and 14 hours 50 minutes of pure pampering on the return.

As for trans-Pacific routes, Singapore Airlines, Emirates and Cathay Pacific reign supreme, with consistent top customer ratings year after year. India's Jet Airways is hoping to break into this luxury market with first-class service from Newark or JFK to Mumbai via Brussels that features private cabins with sliding double doors, 83-inch lie-flat beds, storage closets, work/dining tables for two and 23-inch flat video monitors.

Virgin Atlantic's aggressive use of luxury seating and passenger perks has had a very positive effect on its profits, even as it faced higher fuel costs in the first half of 2008. The company reported pre-tax profits for the year ended February 2009 rose from about $55 million to $108 million.

In the U.S., United Airlines is pushing its "United Economy Plus" seats on Airbus 320 and Boeing 757 aircraft on international routes. Available on a first-come, first-serve basis to its elite mileage club members and to full-fare ticket holders, these seats offer 36 inches of pitch. These seats come at a price. One way fares tack on between $14 and $109 per ticket.

5) Open Skies Agreement Lowers Restrictions on Trans-Atlantic Travel

A landmark transportation agreement was signed in April 2007 between the U.S. and the 27 member states of the EU, which replaced existing restrictions on flights between the two regions. In the past, non-stop flights from Europe to the U.S. were limited to particular carriers. With the new agreement, referred to as “open skies,” every U.S. and EU carrier is authorized to fly between any city in those regions. The treaty officially went into effect on March 31, 2009.

The previous restrictions allowed American Airlines, British Airways and Alitalia to dominate the lucrative trans-Atlantic routes since they had established landing rights at various major airports such as London’s Heathrow. Now, Continental, Delta, Air France-KLM and Aer Lingus, among others, have permission to fly into Heathrow, greatly increasing competition and opening the market for airline takeovers regardless of the nationality of the acquiring company.

In other words, U.S. airlines are allowed to fly from any city in America directly to any city in the E.U., and vice versa. For example, British Airways launched a new airline (named OpenSkies) that serves transatlantic routes with premium-class service in June 2008. Its first route flies between Paris Orly and New York’s John F. Kennedy Airport. Also, part of the rationale in Lufthansa’s investment in a stake in U.S.-based JetBlue is the fact that Lufthansa covets the use of valuable gates controlled by JetBlue at New York’s JFK Airport.

One snag in the Open Skies premise is Heathrow’s already jammed facilities. Landing and take-off slots are already 98.5% full, so carriers will have to spend millions to acquire the few remaining slots or acquire airlines that already have landing rights (prime-time slots were selling for about $50 million in 2008). More than one-third of the 51 million air travelers flying between the U.S. and Europe go through Heathrow. However, analysts at the U.K.’s Civil Aviation Authority believe that Open Skies will ultimately increase transatlantic travel while lowering ticket prices by about 10%.

The agreement allows European airlines to own up to a 49% stake in airlines based in the U.S., provided that those shares are restricted to no more than a 25% voting interest. Over the long-term, new cross-border airline investments may lead to great consolidation of today’s major airlines into a few global airlines. One likely leader is Air France-

KLM, which, despite the global economic crisis, managed to earn $997 million in profits in 2008.

The Open Skies treaty does not guarantee airlines an unlimited right to partnerships with other airlines when it comes to scheduling, marketing and pricing across international borders. For example, American Airlines, British Airways and Iberia (who are all members of the Oneworld alliance) petitioned the U.S. Department of Transportation for antitrust immunity in August 2008. Without immunity, the alliance would be considered illegal collusion in U.S. courts. Two other alliances, Star (with member airlines United and Lufthansa) and SkyTeam (with member airlines Air France-KLM, Continental and Delta) already have such immunity.

In 2009, Continental won approval from the U.S. Department of Transportation to enter a cooperative agreement with nine other airlines for international routes. This approval might open the door for American Airlines’ bid for antitrust immunity to work with British Airways and Iberia for Atlantic routes.

6) ADS-B Improves Air Traffic Control

A new air traffic control system that is generating headlines is the Automatic Dependent Surveillance-Broadcast (ADS-B) which commenced service in Canada in January 2009. ADS-B uses GPS information to replace radar when tracking planes. It is more accurate and faster than radar, allowing planes to travel more closely together safely. Jets flying under ADS-B surveillance need to be only five miles apart under current standards, even in remote places such as the Earth’s poles or over oceans where radar coverage is not possible. Nav Canada, a private air traffic control service, installed five ground station receivers around Hudson Bay in northern Canada which has no radar coverage. ADS-B is planned to be expanded in 2009 with additional receivers on the east coast of Canada and Greenland. The system is expected to be adopted in the U.S. in a lengthy process that may be complete by 2018.

Another problem that the FAA is working to reduce is runway collision. Airport Movement Area Safety Systems (AMASS) have been installed at 28 U.S. airports. More such systems will be installed at others in the near future. However, while these advanced technologies are being placed at U.S. airports, many international airports, especially those in poverty-stricken countries in Africa and South America, have a long way to go in terms of airport and aircraft safety and security. Political instability and insufficient funds permit many safety breaches to pass undetected, and airplane crash rates in these countries are much higher. While many countries are doing what they can to improve safety and security, passengers continue to fly in these areas at their own risk.

7) General Aviation Feels the Burn of the Global Recession

General aviation covers all aircraft that are not military or used for scheduled airline flights. Much of the world's air traffic falls into this category, which includes private as well as commercial aircraft available for charter or cargo. The General Aviation Manufacturers Association reports that as of early 2009 there were 320,000 general aviation planes worldwide; 231,000 of those planes are based in the U.S. There are almost 4,000 paved general aviation airports in the U.S. that are open to the public, compared to less than 500 airports that serve scheduled airlines.

Up until the end of 2008, general aviation was booming. In 2007, deliveries of business jets exceeded 1,000 for the first time, and shipments of new business jets in 2008 reached 1,315 planes, up 15.6% over 2007. This reflects the boom that peaked in early 2008, and industry analysts project a significant decline in orders for 2009. Overall, worldwide shipments of general aviation aircraft, including airplanes that are not business jets, fell 7.1% in 2008 to 3,969.

Manufacturers are proceeding cautiously by revisiting production schedules and adjusting pricing downward. Gulfstream, a subsidiary of General Dynamics Corp., announced significant order cancellations in the first two quarters of 2009, but also reported that new orders continued to be received. Gulfstream's newest model, the $60 million G650, is attracting attention because it can reach speeds of up to Mach 0.925, just short of the sound barrier and edging out the popular Cessna Citation X, formerly the fastest bizjet, which can fly at Mach 0.92. The G650 is expected for delivery in 2012.

Meanwhile, the sound barrier may be broken by a new jet designed by Aerion Corporation. The $80 million, 12-seat aircraft will be designed to cruise over oceans at Mach 1.6, but will be limited to Mach 1.1 over land. The exception is when flying over the U.S. where flight speeds are restricted to just below the sound barrier due to noise (sonic booms are heard on the ground occur when aircraft exceed the sound barrier, creating high-altitude shock waves). The jet will be capable of flying from New York to Tokyo in 9.5 hours (including a one-hour stop to refuel), which is four to five hours faster than a nonstop commercial jet.

As of August 2009, Aerion's new jet had 50 orders, each with a down payment of $250,000. The first delivery dates are hoped for 2014. Nonetheless, the entrepreneurial team behind the Aerion still has to prove that they can obtain financing, create a successful design for an entirely-new aircraft, initiate a successful manufacturing operation and obtain necessary FAA certification. The launch of this innovative aircraft is a complex and highly challenging project that has much yet to prove.

8) Private Jet Rentals Continue in the Form of Fractional Share Ownership

Companies continue to be focused on the bottom line, compelling them to be conservative about major capital expenditures, including the purchase of business jets, which can cost as much as $70 million or more for the largest long-range bizjets. Many corporations have determined that they would rather rent bizjets than buy them, especially in the harsh glare of the global recession of 2008-2009.

Fractional ownership and rentals have begun to replace outright, fee-simple ownership of corporate jets in many cases. Sales of bizjets to corporate users dropped sharply during the business slowdown of the early 2000s, but the inconvenience of new security rules after 9/11 made access to business jets a must-have for executives who can afford it. Market research firm JETNET LLC reports that corporate operators of general aviation aircraft rose 4.9% to 17,040 in 2008. The global corporate fleet reached 28,367 aircraft, with 17,523 of those based in the U.S.

The fractional ownership concept appeals to companies that need quick access to private jets but do not want the burdens of ownership. While chartering a jet from time-to-time may be appropriate for occasional users, companies that have continuous need for private jet travel find it more cost-effective and efficient to participate in fractional ownership. JETNET reports that there were 5,179 fractional jet owners in 2008, up from 5,168 in 2007. Aircraft flown in fractional programs grew to 1,094 in 2008, up 6.2% over 2007.

Under the fractional concept, users commit to fly a given number of hours yearly, from 10 to 2,500. They pre-purchase the right to use one or more types of aircraft for those hours. Fractional ownership management firms then acquire, staff, maintain and operate the aircraft, keeping them ready and waiting for their user base.

Leading companies in this field include NetJets (owned by conglomerate Berkshire Hathaway), Delta AirElite and Citation Shares. NetJets (www.netjets.com) is especially dominant in the fractional niche. About $416,625 buys a customer a 1/16th share of an entry-level Hawker 400XP jet for 50 hours of flying time. On the high end, more than $3.2 million buys a 1/8 share in a large Falcon 2000EX. Additional costs for the Falcon include $24,638 in monthly maintenance fees plus an hourly flight time charge. The Falcon has an intercontinental range of 4,349 miles. It can fly 10 passengers plus crew nonstop from New York to London at 528 miles per hour.

As of mid-2009, CitationShares (www.citationshares.com) offered a Vector JetCard with a minimum purchase of $100,000. Four aircraft are available: the Citation BRAVO (7 passengers and a 1,850 mile range), Citation XLS (9 passengers and a 2,100 mile range), Citation CJ3 (6 passengers and a 2,036 mile range) and the Citation SOVEREIGN (9 passengers and a 3,159 mile range).

One company, Marquis Jet Partners, has combined these business models by buying up fractional shares in jets (specifically from NetJets) and then reselling them as rentals in blocks of 25 hours. XOJET, a California-based fractional jet company, offers the ability to access flights for as few as four hours per year.

Apart from the rent-versus-own debate, an important issue that remains largely unresolved in private air travel is security. The standards with which most commercial jets must comply simply do not apply to private jets, and as such, security is notoriously lax. While in recent months the private jet charter industry has contemplated instituting standards such as luggage screening, no laws currently require them to do so.

9) Boeing and Airbus Continue Their Struggle for the Best New Aircraft

The latest news in the ongoing battle for the passenger airliner market is the 2009 announcement by Airbus that it will cut production of its A320 single-aisle planes to 34 per month beginning in October; the French manufacturer is also cutting production of its massive A380 jumbo jet in 2009 from 18 to 14. Meanwhile, Boeing announced plans to layoff 10,000 employees in 2009. Boeing is also dealing with a two-year delay in the release of its highly-touted 787 as well as delays and budget overruns for a new version of its 747. In addition, Boeing announced plans to cut production of its 777 by 29% in 2010. This comes on the heels of Airbus' troubles with its giant new Airbus 380 aircraft. Both carriers are enduring cancellations or delays of orders for new planes because airlines are reeling from the global economic crisis. The world's major airlines face combined losses totaling more than $10 billion for 2009. According to Morten Beyer & Agnew, Airbus had 67 cancellations in the first eight months of 2008 while Boeing had 63 during the same period. By August 2009, Boeing reported a total of 60 order cancellations for 787s for the year, plus 13 new orders.

Delays in delivery of the first Airbus A380s were expected to cost Airbus about $6 billion in penalties and increased costs, on top of the $12 billion already invested in the project. Significant problems were faced by Airbus in the A380's wiring harness, the overall projected weight and other areas. However, Airbus generated international fanfare with the delivery of its first A380 to Singapore Airlines, many months late in October 2007. The Asian carrier now flies it between Sydney and Singapore, and it added a new route in March 2008 from Singapore to London. Emirates Airlines and Qantas were the next carriers to offer international flights on the A380, starting in 2008.

Boeing and Airbus have been in fierce competition since 2004 with their new airliner concepts. The success of Boeing's new fuel-efficient 787, which was expected to be ready for its first flight in mid-2009 and first delivery in early 2010, hinges on the hope that demand for smaller, more frequent international flights will increase in the future. To fill this hoped-for demand, the 787, known affectionately at Boeing as the "Dreamliner," will offer passengers non-stop intercontinental flights between regional international cities, such as Athens and Atlanta, rather than just the standard New York-London and Frankfurt-Philadelphia legs.

The 787 has been experiencing unfortunate delays, similar to those endured by the Airbus 380. The latest was announced in August 2009, when production was temporarily halted in an Italian plant while a part redesign is implemented. Boeing projects a total market of 3,500 airplanes through 2023, with a value of $610 billion.

The Dreamliner's maximum range will be 9,600 statute miles. While the 787 will not be Boeing's biggest aircraft, it will be the company's lightest and most fuel-efficient. The price tag is $157 million to $167 million per airplane, depending on the model.

The majority of the aircraft will be constructed from carbon-based composite materials, which are lighter than aluminum. As airlines pay the price for gambling on fuel hedging (which cost them millions of dollars in 2008 due to drops in fuel prices while the carriers were locked in at higher fuel prices), the demand for aircraft efficiency should position the Dreamliner in an increasingly favorable light. In addition to being lightweight, these materials are easier to mold into precise shapes. This is important for aircraft, which involve lots of curved surfaces. By using such materials, fewer pieces need to be manufactured to create a curve. This translates into cheaper production and assembly costs. In addition to being lightweight, Boeing promises that the materials are durable, to the extent that airlines should see 12 years of service before a 787 requires its first major maintenance overhaul (as compared to six years for an aircraft made of aluminum).

Such materials are not new to Boeing's assembly line—about 11% of its 777 is already made from composite materials. Yet a commercial aircraft built primarily of such materials is new. Another development is the installation of structural sensors. While diagnostic sensors that measure temperature and pressure are commonplace on aircraft, Boeing plans to install multiple sensors on the 787 that will allow pilots to continually monitor its structural integrity.

If Boeing can deliver on its promise that the 787 will use 20% less fuel on comparable flights by today's jetliners, travelers can expect to benefit in many ways, including the option of more direct flights. This is also good news for full-service airlines. Boeing does not envision that the 787 will become part of a discount fleet such as JetBlue's or Southwest's, however. Its sights are set on major carriers serving large numbers of international travelers, especially those in Europe and Asia. In fact, Boeing's first customer for the new aircraft was Japan's All Nippon Airways, which agreed to purchase 50 planes. As of mid-2009, 850 Dreamliners had been ordered by customers around the world, but cancellations left the order book at a bit less than 800 units.

Nevertheless, Boeing is hedging its bets on the types of travelers that these geographic markets attract. Rather than developing purely single-class planes, Boeing is experimenting with a couple of different platforms involving both single- and double-class planes. It has developed different models with varying nautical ranges and seating capacities. Currently, the 787-8 is available with the capacity to carry 210 to 250 passengers with a range of 8,640 to 9,266 statute miles. The 787-3 will accommodate 290 to 330 passengers on shorter routes of 2,825 to 3,446 maximum statute miles. (The increased passenger load means that the airplane can carry less fuel due to weight restrictions, and therefore has a lower range.) There is also a 787-9 that will carry up to 290 passengers for up to 9,600 statute miles. Another plus for the 787 is the choice of General Electric or Rolls-Royce PLC engines. Boeing designed the plane in such a way that one engine can be swapped for the other in 24 hours as opposed to the two months and $1 million required for typical aircraft. This ability is a great selling point for airlines planning ahead to times when they well might wish to sell a 787 to a rival company that uses the alternative engines.

But hedging has its costs, too. Multiple aircraft models are expensive (not to mention their composite materials, which run 10 to 100 times the price of aluminum). To offset these costs, Boeing has outsourced much of the manufacturing to companies overseas. About 35% of the 787's components are being manufactured in Japan. While outsourcing isn't especially new for Boeing (nearly 70% of the 777 models were made abroad), the fact that this outsourcing also includes wing manufacture in Japan is a new development. All of these are risky changes for a historically conservative company. Still haunted by the specter of its ill-fated Sonic Cruiser (a costly project it scrapped after the 9/11 terrorist attacks), Boeing hopes that the Dreamliner will live up to its name.

Boeing's 747, the original "jumbo jet," was first manufactured in September 1969. It has gone through numerous revampings and enhancements through the years, including newer extra-long-range models that can hold more than 500 passengers. In late 2005, Boeing announced plans to further update the 747 to compete with the A380. The new version, called the 747-8, has 34 more seats than the 747-400, while the cargo-only version can carry 16% more load. Additional changes include a more fuel-efficient engine (the same being developed for the 787), a longer body and updated wings. The first deliveries of the 747-8 were scheduled for late 2009, but have been delayed until the third quarter of 2010. As of February 2009, the firm had 28 orders for the 747-8, including 20 passenger models for Lufthansa and the remaining outfitted as freighters or VIP or head of state versions.

Back at Airbus, the A380 represents the firm's alternative vision for the future of air travel. While Boeing's crystal ball shows an increase in demand for smaller, long-haul flights between a wider range of international cities, especially in Asia and Europe, Airbus predicts that international travelers will be better served by a more centralized hub system, wherein large groups of passengers are flown in and out of fewer cities. Airbus's new plane is well-suited for the hub model, while Boeing's aircraft could adapt to either a hub or point-to-point system.

The A380 is the world's largest passenger aircraft, and, at a price tag of $280 million or more, the most expensive. It holds between 555 and 800 passengers, based on single- or multiple-class models. With a range of up to 9,200 miles it can travel a great distance without refueling. Airbus hopes that operating costs will be about 15% lower per seat-mile than that of a 747.

The Airbus A380 is not without its drawbacks, and its production problems have already resulted in a managerial shakeup at the highest levels at Airbus and at parent company European Aeronautic Defense & Space Co. (EADS). Delivery of the first A380 fell several months behind schedule. In addition, there were also problems in reducing the overall weight of the aircraft, which Airbus had previously promised to do. As of July 2009, Airbus had received 200 firm orders for the A380, and had delivered 17.

Airbus has another new jet in the works, the A350 XWB (extra-wide body), which will seat between 270 and 350 passengers. It is Airbus' answer to Boeing's 787 and its commitment to smaller, lightweight, fuel-efficient aircraft. The first delivery of the airplane is expected in 2013, many years behind the 787. Useful range will be as high as 8,300 nautical miles, depending on layout. As of July 2009, the company had 493 firm orders for the aircraft.

The supply of parts is proving a problem for both Airbus and Boeing. They are stymied by late shipments of everything from seats to galleys for a variety of jets, not just the new 787 and A380. Assembly lines which once ran like clockwork are bogging down as nearly complete aircraft sit on the tarmac. The manufacturers are unable to deliver the almost finished planes and therefore unable to collect the millions of dollars in payment they desperately need. Officials at Airbus say that about 8% of its widebody deliveries in 2008 were delayed due to waits for parts while Boeing delivered at least three jets late in the second quarter of 2008 for the same reason. Suppliers, which are typically smaller firms specializing in one particular product such as a business class seat or an aircraft galley, are unable to meet growing demand. For example, Sell GmbH, a German galley manufacturer, hired 250 new workers to supplement its 425 staffers, and invested millions in new machine tools and expanded factory space in 2008. Both Boeing and Airbus are taking steps to alleviate supply chain problems. In July 2009, Boeing announced its agreement to acquire a Vought facility in South Carolina that performs fabrication and assembly of vital aft-fuselage sections of the 787.

Another problem facing Boeing and Airbus is the global economic crisis' effect on firms that lease large numbers of aircraft to airlines that choose not to buy the planes outright. Analysts project that fleet leasing activity will drop considerably over the near-term, spelling trouble for the brokers who are major clients of both Boeing and Airbus. For example, International Lease Finance Corp., a unit of struggling American International Group (AIG), has a fleet of about 1,000 Boeing planes. AIG is attempting to sell the subsidiary, which is valued at about $8 billion, but as of mid 2009 had not been able to find a buyer in the tight credit market.

As for the future, watch for intense competition between the two manufacturers to continue in the slower global economy. Meanwhile, there will be immense, multi-billion dollar demand for new airliners over the long term. Boeing estimates that the global jet fleet will rise to more than 35,000 airplanes in 2024, up from less than 17,000 in 2004.

Boeing and Airbus both may be facing new competition when China begins manufacturing large commercial aircraft by 2020. The Chinese government succeeded in building its first commercial aircraft, a regional ARJ-21 jet. Between 2007 and 2025, China is expected to buy 2,230 new planes, so the government is fast-tracking development of its own manufacturing facilities.

Japan is also attempting to join the fray with its own jet manufacturing. Mitsubishi Heavy Industries Ltd. announced plans for the Mitsubishi Regional Jet, a 96-seat plane with first deliveries scheduled for 2012. Mitsubishi has financial as well as technical support from a number of major global enterprises, namely Toyota Motor Corp., Boeing and United Technologies Corp.'s Pratt & Whitney jet engines. The Regional Jet would compete with Embraer's EMB170 commuter jet and Bombardier's CS02.

10) New Aircraft Designs Offer Greater Passenger Comfort/More Efficient Engines

An important selling point in new passenger aircraft, whether built by Airbus or Boeing, is comfort. Changes in seat configuration, window size and cabin climate are all key elements when buying new planes.

At Boeing, for example, the new 787 Dreamliner offers a new, patented eight-seats-across configuration in economy class. The three-two-three arrangement allows seats that measure 19 inches across instead of 17, which is standard on Boeing 737s and 757s. However, the plane's cabin is wide enough to fit nine seats across, allowing some buyers to configure the cabin with narrower seats and more passengers. Boeing representatives estimate that about 75% of the airlines that have ordered the new plane have opted to change to the nine-seat arrangement.

Windows on new aircraft models are significantly larger, as much as 65% bigger than those on older planes. The increased size allows outside views from almost any seat. Another window improvement is a film covering that can be adjusted by flight attendants to block out light during movies while still allowing passengers to see out.

Boeing and Airbus both have improved in-flight cabin humidity levels. Airbus' new A350 UWB has the ability to achieve 20% humidity while the Dreamliner offers 15%. Both are a tangible improvement of the 10% level on existing airplanes.

Meanwhile, increased entertainment and relaxation features will be featured in new aircraft at many airlines. In particular, the massive size of the A380 lends itself to designing lounges, shopping areas or recreations areas and even showers into the plan. Some airlines are considering offering massage and hair salon features on the aircraft.

Jet Engine Designs Advance Toward the Future

The Holy Grail of airliner engineering is to save dramatic amounts of fuel, which will require significant savings in weight in both airframes and engines, along with improvements in engine design. The next generation of jet engines will soon be commercialized, as the global airline industry has set high goals for fuel consumption reduction. Engine manufacturer Pratt & Whitney is working on a concept called PurePower PW 1000G that promises double-digit reductions in fuel use and emissions while reducing engine noise by as much as 50%. The engine underwent its first major stress tests in February 2009. This radical engine utilizes a gear box to vary the speeds between the fan and the turbine for more efficiency in what is referred to as a geared turbofan. Meanwhile competitors Rolls Royce and GE are working on their own revolutionary designs, which may include "open rotor" concepts—something like the open propellers on non-jets—or parts manufactured from weight-saving composite materials. GE, in partnership with French aerospace and defense firm Safran SA, is hoping to develop an engine with fewer moving parts that would be available as soon as 2016.

11) In Flight Wireless Takes Off

Airlines in the U.S. and around the world are investing in wireless technology to provide Internet access, e-mail capability and, for non-U.S. carriers, cellphone use while in the air. Previously, the technology necessary to provide these services was less than satisfactory and costs were prohibitively high. Today, new satellite technologies are making in-flight wireless a reality. Wi-Fi is already in use on private business jets and for commercial carrier crews. The World Airline Entertainment Association projects that the market for in-flight communications and live entertainment will grow from $50 million in 2008 to $9.6 billion by 2016. Of course, this can be very good news for airlines, as they would expect a health cut of this money, and all airlines are keenly seeking new ways to boost revenues.

In the U.S., JetBlue Airways Corp. acquired LiveTV, LLC, a provider of entertainment as well as e-mail. JetBlue is offering the service on its flights and selling it to other carriers such as Continental Airlines. Alaska Air Group is partnering with Row44, Inc. to test a satellite-based system to provide in-flight Internet connectivity, e-mail and text messaging. In March 2009, the carrier installed the first external antenna, a satellite communications receiver/transmitter and two wireless access points on one of its Boeing 737s. Alaska Air hopes to have its entire fleet outfitted with the technology by late 2009. Meanwhile, American Airlines and Virgin America were offering in-flight wireless Internet access on some aircraft by the end of 2008, and Delta Air Lines announced plans to have all its planes fitted with wireless Internet access. The cost to users is about $9.95 for flights of under three hours, and $12.95 for longer flights.

The bone of contention for in-flight wireless has been and continues to be the use of cellphones. While U.S. carriers continue to bow to the majority of customers who strongly object to the noise, non-U.S. airlines including Air France, Emirates and RyanAir were testing and implementing the service in 2008. The technology for in-flight calls, which is provided by Geneva-based OnAir (owned by the Internet technology firm SITA and Airbus), uses a low-power onboard network that captures passengers' phone signals and links them to a satellite for transmission to ground receivers. In early tests, the system worked, but with a number of glitches. Patchy sound quality is a problem as are the roaming charges of up to 3 Euros (about $4.50) per minute. Another limitation is that only six passengers at a time can get a signal in order to avoid interfering with aircraft equipment. Despite these problems, the airlines involved plan to have the systems installed in their fleets by 2009. Lufthansa is a notable exception, deciding not to allow in-flight cellphone conversations due to its passengers' expressed distaste for the practice.

12) Airports Hit Hard by Tough Economy

After a boom in which airports were scrambling for ways to accommodate growing numbers of passengers and the infrastructure demands of the giant new Airbus A380, the global economic crisis is leaving airports with fewer passengers. For example, Ontario (California) International Airport, which was built to ease congestion at nearby LAX, was handling 7 million passengers per year between 2005 and 2008. In August 2008, passenger traffic dropped 18% after JetBlue Airways pulled out and ExpressJet Airlines went out of business. Remaining Southwest has cut flights, bringing the airport's total of non-stop flights to 36 cities down to 17. Ten of the facility's 24 gates sat empty as of 2009. Expansion and improvement projects at a number of other airports including Atlanta, Phoenix, Oakland and Las Vegas have been delayed or abandoned altogether.

Airports charge fees for landing and rents for gates to airlines based on costs of operation and debt payments. In an increasingly vicious cycle, slower airports will have to charge airlines higher fees and rents as the carriers cut flights.

Companies that provide food, retail and sanitation services to airports are also feeling the crunch. A shop selling sunglasses in the Ontario Airport, for example, was seeing about 20 sales per day until late 2008. Now, the shop may make only four or five sales per day.

During the boom, major U.S. airports were seeing more travelers than ever before. Heading the list is Hartsfield-Jackson Atlanta International Airport, which reported 90 million passengers in 2008 according to the Airports Council International, up from 89 million in 2007 and 84.8 million in 2006. Hartsfield-Jackson was followed by O'Hare International Airport with 69 million in 2008 (compared to 76 million in 2007 and 76.5 million in 2006) and Los Angeles International Airport with 59 million in 2008 (down from 62 million in 2007 and 61 million in 2006). Geneva-based Airports Council International reported a 3.1% overall decline in passengers arriving and departing from North American airports in 2008 over the previous year. Cargo decreased by 7.6%, bringing total operations down in 2008 by 5.8%.

Large-capacity aircraft can be a logistical nightmare for airports. With up to 800 passengers on a single Airbus A380 plane, concerns about efficient loading and unloading, as well as runway and jetway issues, all come to bear. To deal with these issues, Airbus has been working with 16 airports that it believes will handle most of the A380's traffic (among them are London-Heathrow, Dubai, Singapore, Tokyo-Narita, Frankfurt and Paris). Participating airports are spending an average of $100 million each to upgrade their facilities in order to handle the A380. The chief concerns are the development of additional double-decker jetways to load and unload passengers (the A380 will require a minimum of two, while some flights may need three jetways) and runway modifications to handle the added weight of the aircraft (estimated as high as 1.2 million pounds). Meanwhile, major international airlines like Lufthansa that will be operating both 747s and A380s are working hard to enable their gates to accommodate either type of aircraft without serious modification. For airlines operating the new A380, the goal will be to turn around the aircraft in about 90 minutes, the same time that it takes to turn around a Boeing 747.

Los Angeles International Airport (LAX) is spending more than $53 million to accommodate the A380, in addition to a $250 million project to upgrade and improve runways on its south side. Currently, LAX only had one runway that was 200 feet wide (all others were 150 feet). Airport authorities are hoping that the FAA will approve the 150-foot-wide runways for the A380; otherwise additional costly modifications are in order. Several other changes are underway. A street underpass near one runway has been reinforced in order to handle the A380's weight. Several runway intersections must also be modified, and more jetways need to be added. Baggage delivery, ticket counters and customs areas are also being refurbished at LAX.

Meanwhile, international airports, such as London's Heathrow, are spending copious amounts of money on remodeling and updating its facilities. Heathrow has budgeted $857 million to redevelop its Terminal 3, and spent $9 billion on its new Terminal 5, which opened in 2008. The greatly promoted opening was marred by flight cancellations, baggage system shutdowns and staff shortages. However, once the new terminal's bugs are worked out, it should be able to handle up to 12,000 bags per hour on its 11 miles of luggage conveyors and expand the airport's overall capacity to 90 million passengers per year.

Paris's Charles de Gaulle airport is also making big changes. The A380 is expected to serve as much as 10% of that airport's passengers eventually, so it is building nine A380 gates. Several more will be added in subsequent years. The United Arab Emirates' Dubai International Airport opened a new $4.1-billion terminal in 2008. Emirates, the UAE's main airline, ordered dozens of the giant Airbus aircraft, and the new terminal includes 23 A380-ready gates.

Private airport management companies are largely responsible for airport renovation and expansion. Notable firms include Aeroports de Paris SA, which is overseeing improvements to both Orly and Charles de Gaulle airports serving Paris, and Schiphol Group, which is in charge of the airport in Amsterdam.

BAA PLC, owned by a consortium headed by Spanish firm Grupo Ferrovial SA, operates Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted, the three major airports serving London. However, as of early 2009, BAA was under U.K. government orders to sell Gatwick and Stansted, as regulators are forcing a breakup of what they see as a monopoly.

The new kid on the airport operations block is Dubai Aerospace Enterprise, a $15-billion consortium of oil and aerospace companies that are collectively backed by the royal family of Dubai.

The new enterprise plans to build cutting-edge new airport facilities throughout the Middle East and Asia.

In general, airport expansion and remodeling are underway in cities throughout the U.S. as well. The FAA called for 43 airport expansions from 2005 through 2020. FAA analysts projected that the number of passengers embarking on airliners in the U.S. will grow from 753 million in 2008 to 1.02 billion in 2019. The administration maintains that five major airports were already suffering from too much traffic, including Hartsfield-Jackson Atlanta International Airport, Newark Liberty International Airport, O'Hare International Airport in Chicago, Philadelphia International Airport and La Guardia Airport in New York. However, as the global economic crisis grounds passengers, many airport expansion projects are being curtailed or shelved, at least until the economy rebounds.

13) Deregulation Opens Huge Travel Markets in China and India

The booming economic growth of both China and India are impacting business sectors around the world. Rapidly growing middle classes in both countries are beginning to travel by air in numbers never before seen, and airlines and hotels in both the home countries and foreign nations are scrambling to get in on the action.

In China, a mere 4.5 million citizens traveled overseas in 1995. That number skyrocketed to 47 million in 2007, according to the World Travel and Tourism Council (WTTC). Industry experts predict that more than 50 million Chinese tourists will travel overseas by 2010. In the WTTC's figures, the U.S. accounted for $1.35 trillion in direct plus indirect travel expenditures in 2009, followed by Japan at $479 billion and China at $449 billion. By 2019, the organization forecasts the U.S. number to grow to $2.35 trillion, with China surging to $1.59 trillion and Japan climbing to $588 billion. Obviously, China is the market to watch, with 100 million Chinese expected to travel to foreign lands in 2019.

Chinese airlines ordered more than 100 aircraft from Boeing in 2007 and also ordered 160 passenger planes that year from Airbus. In 2008, China Air alone ordered 15 Boeing 777s and 30 737s. As for airports, China had about 150 in 2009. The Chinese government plans to build another 97 airports by 2020. Meanwhile, the government of China and Airbus have announced plans to build and operate an Airbus manufacturing plant in China.

Not only are the Chinese themselves traveling more, there is also a booming market in foreign business people and tourists traveling to China. The 2008 Beijing Summer Olympics attracted hundreds of thousands of athletes and spectators, placing a premium on flights and hotel rooms

India's growing economy is also boosting travel at an enormous rate. However, intense competition and smaller travel budgets saw many India-based airlines hurting financially in 2008 and 2009.

Aircraft purchases in India are reaching historic highs. In 2007, state-owned Air India received the first of 68 aircraft ordered from Boeing in 2006, in a deal valued at $8.2 billion. At the same time, Jet Airways, India's largest private airline, signed a purchase agreement with Airbus for 15 A330-200s. Industry analysts project that India will add purchase more than 300 aircraft between 2005 and 2010.

India's hotels were also experiencing exponential growth through mid 2008. As of August 2007, there were approximately 110,000 hotel rooms in India, according to the Indian government's Ministry of Tourism, with an additional 70,000 to 80,000 rooms to be added soon. Despite the slowing global economy and terrorist attacks on Mumbai hotels in late 2008, hotel development will be brisk, including luxury resorts slated for popular tourist destinations such as Udaipur and Kerala.

14) Booking Travel Over the Internet Becomes the Norm

Around the globe, vast numbers of business and leisure travelers alike continue to look to the Internet as their primary means of gaining travel information, reserving hotels and booking air tickets. U.S. online leisure travel revenues were $105 billion in 2008 according to market research firm eMarketer. Plunkett Research estimates global travel purchases online at $300 billion for 2008. Although travel remains one of the most successful of all e-commerce sectors, growth in online leisure and unmanaged business travel slowed from 12% in 2007 to about 9% in 2008, according to PhoCusWright's U.S. Online Travel Overview. Growth is expected to slow further in 2009 and 2010 to about 7% annually. This is due partly to market saturation and also to the global economic crisis.

Expedia, Travelocity, Orbitz, Hotwire and Priceline are among the largest firms offering online travel booking services in North America. Expedia's former parent firm, IAC/InterActiveCorp, spun off Expedia as a free-standing company with more than $2.1 billion in 2005 annual revenues. (Revenues topped $2.66 billion in 2007, on nearly $20 billion in gross travel bookings. Revenue in 2008 reached $2.9 billion.)

In Europe, major online travel booking firms include EasyGroup (a holding company that owns and operates a number of travel and entertainment brands including easyCar, easyHotel and easyValue), Lastminute.com (a subsidiary of Travelocity Europe Limited), and eBookers.

For many years, online travel booking services enjoyed soaring growth by providing convenient price comparisons and online reservations. Today, however, while these firms continue to have massive revenues, the boom days are over. Major hotel chains and airlines have invested immense sums in their own, branded sites. The travel providers benefit because the use of their own online booking systems eliminates fees to middlemen and wages to human reservation agents. Consumers benefit because they have seamless access to travel information, frequent flyer accounts and other perks.

There is a large difference between the methods and goals of the independent online sites and those operated directly by travel providers such as hotel chains and airlines. Sites like Expedia may reserve airline seats in bulk from the airlines at a wholesale price, and then resell that inventory via their web sites at a profit. The airlines, in contrast, see their own web sites as cost-cutting extensions of their reservation systems. Southwest Airlines was one of the first to make online reservations available to customers through its web site; its flights are not for sale on other online travel sites. In fact, successful discount airlines, including Southwest and JetBlue, sell the majority of their tickets online, thus saving millions of dollars in annual operating costs. Other airlines are following Southwest's lead with excellent success. More and more, travelers find it convenient and cost-effective to book online.

Another trend contributing to the growth in online travel booking is "dynamic packaging." Dynamic packaging allows customers to package hotels, cars and flights together in any manner they choose for one price, rather than being forced to accept package deals arranged by airlines with their own hotel vendors. Expedia has been the pioneer in this area. Also, major tour operators, such as Backroads, are relying on their web sites to a greater extent for the generation of revenues and new customers.

Just as online air travel bookings have grown, so too have online hotel bookings, thanks to the many web sites that now offer reservations, pictures and virtual tours of rooms and amenities. But a number of hotel chains are using various new strategies to bypass hotel discounters. Expedia, Orbitz and Travelocity are able to offer cut-rate prices on hotels by buying large blocks of rooms from hoteliers at a discount and then reselling them to consumers. Many hotels are attempting to reclaim part of their business by selling rooms at their own sites exclusively. Marriott instituted a program in which it not only agreed to match the best deals on its rooms posted at other web sites, but also to offer customers a discount if they made their reservations through Marriott's site. Many hotels have adopted aggressive online tactics and are denying awards points to customers who book their rooms through third-party sites.

A trend that is particularly notable is the increase in online bookings for business travel. During the economic slowdown of the early 2000s, companies began to search for cheaper ways to fly their employees to meetings. This trend will be encouraged in 2009 due to the global economic crisis. The traditional bricks-and-mortar travel agencies that businesses used to rely on often can't match the deals that business travelers found on the Internet. Now, online services have gained significant market share in one of the traditional agencies' core services: business travel. Orbitz, Travelocity and Expedia have all established business travel web sites. The sites look similar to their leisure travel sites, with the exception that the business travel sites, called Orbitz for Business, Travelocity Business and Egencia (formerly Expedia Corporate Travel), contain client profiles with information such as a company's list of preferred hotel vendors, airlines and rental cars. Priceline is another popular venue for business travel booking.

Traditional travel agencies have endured vast changes in the past 15 years, including this growing trend among corporate travelers to use online booking services. Some travel agents have successfully repositioned themselves as "consultants," charging hourly fees for their expertise. Others specialize in providing unique knowledge about travel to out-of-the-way places such as Cambodia, French Polynesia or Africa.

The largest national travel agencies run sophisticated web sites of their own. They act as outsourced travel departments for their major corporate clients and arrange discounts for clients who purchase massive amounts of travel. For example, Carlson Wagonlit is a leading global business travel agency, with offices in more than 150 nations.

Many large travel agencies that focus on leisure travelers buy hotel and aircraft space at wholesale and then create highly profitable tour packages to popular tourist destinations such as Cancun, Jamaica and Orlando. Regardless of these efforts, Internet travel booking is here to stay, and forward-looking companies both large and small have no choice but to join the online party.

Lately, travel-specific search engines are gaining a vast audience. These engines search a plethora of airline, hotel and car rental web sites, many of which do not participate in shared databases used by more established travel sites such as Expedia and Travelocity. With business models similar to Google, the engines make their money by selling online ads and by favorably positioning clients in web search findings. Some of the more popular travel search engines are SideStep and Kayak.com in the U.S. and Ctrip.com and eLong.net in China.

Bricks and Clicks: Online Travel Sites Open Stores in Tourist Areas

Expedia and Travelocity have opened booths and kiosks in hotels and other travel-related areas in which customers can book everything from flights and hotel rooms to tickets to nearby attractions such as luaus and adventure tours. The kiosks often serve travelers who have yet to use the online sites to book their vacations. In addition to the powerful marketing afforded by the physical presence, the online companies enjoy profit margins of 20% at the kiosks, since they operate with modest overhead and often sell high-profit tours and add-ons, as opposed to between 10% and 18% for hotel sales online and 5% to 10% for online rental car bookings.

15) Sustainable Tourism and Ecotourism Grow as Certification Standards Emerge

Ecotourism and "ecospas" are all the rage, particularly among affluent travelers seeking a soothing retreat and a respite from the daily grind back home. Ecotourism, as a philosophy used by a hotel in design, construction and operation, generally has goals that include: conservation of electricity, water and other natural resources; sensitivity to the surrounding natural environment, ecosystem, wildlife (and sometimes native peoples); use of organic ingredients in the hotel kitchen (which may include items from a hotel's own organic garden); and a peaceful, soothing environment throughout the hotel property (which may include such elements as extensive landscaping with native plants, running water, Zen-like gardens and areas that encourage contemplation, meditation and relaxation). The International Ecotourism Society estimates that ecotourism revenue is growing at a rate of about 30% worldwide per year.

“Sustainable tourism” is another phrase used to describe this sector. It might be tempting to use the word “minimalist” to describe some eco-properties, but the fact is that they tend to include high levels of luxurious coddling (e.g., thick towels in marble-lined bathrooms) to help justify high room rates and menu prices. Ecospas are standard features in ecofriendly hotels. At the much-touted El Monte Sagrado (www.elmontesagrado.com) in Taos, New Mexico, for example, rooms in high season typically are priced from $269 to more than $550 (prices have been cut, at least temporarily, since the advent of the global recession), and the spa offers a wide variety of expensive treatments and massages. The hotel bills itself as “the living resort,” and combines water conservation and recycling efforts with spa treatments and fine dining.

Hotels involved in ecotourism are becoming touchy about the standards that should be met in order to be considered ecofriendly. Accordingly, organizations have sprung up to certify ecofriendly properties. For example, there is Costa Rica’s Certification for Sustainable Tourism. Green Globe (www.greenglobe.org) is a program established in 1994 by the World Travel & Tourism Council. Australia has the Eco Certification Program. The Blue Flag campaign (www.blueflag.org) is a Danish organization that names approximately 3,300 ecofriendly beaches and marinas in 39 countries. Typically, these organizations charge fees to the hotels involved, and may require periodic on-site audits of the properties.

16) Destination Club Membership Growth Is Checked

In the same manner that corporations and wealthy individuals are enthusiastically participating in fractional bizjet ownership, wealthy travelers have been taking a growing interest in luxury fractional vacation home ownership. Participants, sometimes referred to as “members,” purchase temporal ownership in a group of highly appealing properties. What makes this arrangement different from the standard time-share is the fact that members buy the right to use a variety of multi-million dollar houses (and sometimes yachts) in prime locations around the world, but do not actually own any property. In addition to posh accommodations, these programs offer stellar service. Concierges often handle everything from sports equipment rentals to stocking the refrigerator. The concept was a steady success until one of its originators, Tanner & Haley, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy in 2006.

Upfront deposits in such clubs typically range between $70,000 and $450,000, depending on the club and its levels of membership. Annual dues run between $7,000 and more than $50,000. Use of the homes in various destination clubs is usually flexible. Generally, members are limited to a 14-day stay in any property at any one time. Services may include assistance in chartering private jets to take members to their destinations for additional fees.

Most membership fees are from 80% to 100% refundable if the member decides to leave the program. On top of these up-front fees, however, are annual fees, which vary depending on the level of accommodations and the number of days.

So what happened to cause Tanner & Haley to file bankruptcy? Part of the problem was the firm’s commitment to returning membership deposits, upon request, after tenure of at least 18 months. In addition to that potential capital drain, the company found itself having to lease luxury properties in addition to those it owned to meet client demand, further depleting the company’s resources.

Tanner & Haley members found some solace in the 2007 purchase of the firm’s real estate holdings by Ultimate Resort, a rival destination club firm based in Orlando, Florida. Thanks to the $100 million transaction, Tanner & Haley members were invited to join Ultimate without having to pay its initiation fee, which runs between $120,000 and $215,000 depending on the level of membership. Ultimate Resort further built up its portfolio with the 2008, $200 million merger with Private Escapes, another major destination club.

Other players in this business include Exclusive Resorts, which is 50%-owned by AOL’s Steve Case, Solstice, The LUSSO Collection and Quintess. Each offers various packages and/or levels of service. Both Exclusive Resorts and the former Private Escapes issued letters to its members assuring them that their investments are safe and that their business models differ from that of Tanner & Haley.

A new player in the destination club arena was Everlands which focused on natural resource conservation and high-end, eco-conscious properties. Everlands hoped to attract 1,800 members by 2014. However, the firm was reported to have suspended operation as a destination club in March 2009.

Tanner & Haley’s bankruptcy filing may be a serious blow to destination clubs in general if confidence in the overall concept is compromised. As of early 2009, there were fewer than 15 major destination club companies around the world. More consolidation may occur. The merging of two smaller clubs, Solstice and Parallel, for example, was completed in November 2006. Quintess also merged with Dream Catcher and Leading Residences of the World. In 2009, Quintess, Leading Residences of the World and Dublin-based Oyster Circle formed a strategic alliance in which their members will be allowed to use properties in all three clubs.

One bright spot on the destination club horizon may be the formation of the Destination Club Association. Consisting of a small number of member clubs, the association is expected to operate as a governing body for the industry. It has established a list of best practices such as disclosure, financial responsibility and appropriate marketing and sales activity. Member clubs hope that prospective members will be assured of the safety of their investments and the quality of the clubs.

17) Hotel Occupancy Rates Fall/Pod Rooms Grow in Popularity

As 2008's high gasoline prices and a slowing economy kept more and more travelers at home, hotels were starting to feel the pinch. According to Smith Travel Research, U.S. hotel occupancy levels were down about 5% for 2008 from 2007. Especially hard hit are destinations reached only by air such as Hawaii. Occupancy rates at hotels on the island of Maui fell from 85% in 2007 to 63% in 2008 according to research firm Hospitality Advisors. An even more dire projection comes from PKF Consulting, an Atlanta, Georgia firm. It expects U.S. occupancy rates to drop to 58.3% for all of 2009 (a fall of 4.4% from 2008). This is lower even than the 59% reported by Smith Travel for 2002, the first full year following the 9/11 attacks.

PKF also predicted that U.S. revenue per available hotel room (revpar) will drop by 4.3% in 2009 and hotel industry profits will drop by 7.9%. Marriott International expected its global revpar to fall between 17% and 20% for 2009. The firm reported a 24% drop in revpar in the second quarter of 2009. This is an excellent example of the devastating effect of the economic slowdown on business and leisure travel.

The overall slowing is an ominous sign for a number of hotel companies that were in the midst of expansion. According to Lodging Econometrics, there were about 6,000 new hotels under construction in the U.S. as of mid-2008, totaling about 800,000 rooms. Still more projects that were on the drawing board have been scrapped due to lack of financing. Major hotel chains are cutting back on their growth plans for the near-term. Hyatt, for example, planned to open 80 hotels in 2008, but scaled back to 64. Likewise, several huge hotel developments planned for Las Vegas have been put on hold. The only bright spots in hotel construction or expansion appear to be in China, where two global hotel operators, 7 Days Inn Group and Accor Group, are undergoing significant expansion, and in India, where the long term need for additional rooms looks promising.

Now, as hoteliers face falling occupancy rates, some are dropping prices significantly. Harrah's Las Vegas, for example, advertised rooms for as little as $60 per night during August 2009. Other hotels, however, are finding that lower rates are not attracting more hotel guests. After 9/11, many hotels lowered their rates but saw little increase in demand. People chose to stay at home more in 2001 and appeared to be doing so again in 2008 and 2009. Many hotels are attempting to create compelling package offerings at great prices in order to drive business. For example, room packages may include breakfast, spa credits, dinners in luxury on-site restaurants or other perks. Members of the loyalty reward programs of major hotel chains receive a continual stream of emails offering last minute discounts, resort travel packages or deep discounts on weekend rates. Hotels in Las Vegas are being particularly aggressive, and some owners are finding this strategy successful. The Wynn resort in Las Vegas opened its massive new ultra-luxury wing "Encore" in late 2008, just in time for the economic bust. The owners decided to use bargain pricing to drive up occupancy with good results. In their case, a relatively full hotel at lower rates was preferable to empty rooms.

Corporate and business travel destinations are especially hard hit. Major corporations are cancelling or downsizing meetings, while many firms are telling employees to curtail travel to visit clients and trips to conferences or conventions. The fall off in luxury retreats and meetings by hedge funds, investment banks and other financial industry companies is also a serious blow to the hotel and resort sector.

With travel budgets being slashed, hotels are responding with new, cost effective room alternatives, especially in Europe and Japan. Busy travelers can now book tiny rooms or “pods” that typically measure about 100 square feet (some as small as 65 square feet) in size for the night or just a few hours to rest and freshen up. (In contrast, a more traditional motel is about 300 square feet, and luxury hotel rooms are 450 to 600 square feet.) Rooms generally have a small bed, flat screen TV and tiny bathrooms (some offered shared bathrooms), and windows, if there are any, may open onto a corridor instead of outside. Examples of hotels offering pods are Yotel at London’s Heathrow Airport ($105 per night for a 117 square foot “premium cabin”), Pod Hotel in New York ($139 per night for 91.5 square feet) and EasyHotel in Zurich ($71 per night for 104 square feet).

The pod business model is similar to discount airlines in that only the basics are available and low prices are of supreme importance. Pod hotels do not generally offer perks such as fitness facilities, meeting rooms or lavish room service (some do not offer food of any kind). Yet, the services they do offer can be top of the line such as plasma TV screens and high-thread-count sheets. In addition to business travelers, the rooms attract vacationers looking for good deals in locations near major tourist attractions.

On the other end of the scale, a big trend in luxury hotels was the construction of adjacent condominiums. However, as the real estate bubble burst in 2008, owners of many of these properties saw their unit values plummet, and many developers ran into financial difficulty. Some of the residential units were selling for almost $2,000 per square foot before the crash. Of course, the condos make initial profits for the developers, when they are sold. Equally important, the condo owners pay hefty monthly common area fees to help defray the costs of luxurious lobbies, swimming pools, landscape and a high level of personal service. The economic crisis has weakened the luxury condominium market as it has in all other real estate sectors, so watch for project delays and price reductions for existing units through the mid-term.

18) Cruise Industry Bookings Hold Steady

Prior to the recession, the cruise business was enjoying strong demand and exceptional growth through much of the 2000s. Now, cruises are particularly well positioned for today’s budget-conscious tourist, as consumers consider cruises to be all-inclusive vacation packages at reasonable prices. Parents cruising with their children often bunk the entire family in one cabin, saving even more money. Because of cruise lines’ success in positioning themselves as offering travelers exceptional value, they are weathering the global recession relatively well.

The Cruise Lines International Association reports that while total U.S. passenger numbers fell 1.68% to 9.3 million in 2008 from 2007, the global passenger count grew 3.53% to reach more than 13 million. The occupancy rate for North American cruise lines fell slightly from 105.7% in 2007 to 104.2% in 2008. (A room is considered 100% occupied when two people share it; if more people share the room, as is often the case with families, the occupancy rate rises above 100%). Most cruise lines are relying on heavy marketing and fare reductions to keep occupancy rates high.

The most impressive growth in the cruise industry is taking place in Asia. China, specifically, is ripe for a major growth spurt as its expanding middle class learns to appreciate luxuries such as traveling on cruise ships. Asia accounted for less than 5% of the global cruise market in 2007. However, a rapidly growing base of tourists in Asia will boost this number over the mid term. To make the most of this upswing, the major cruise lines are expanding their fleets and routes in the Pacific. Carnival, for example, already had two ships sailing Eastern waters as of early 2009. Royal Caribbean launched two ships in Asia by January 2009.

Carnival, the owner of the Princess, Holland America and Cunard lines and the world’s largest cruise company, is adding global destinations. Carnival has managed to maintain high occupancy rates. In 2008, its occupancy averaged 105.7%. High occupancy, even if it’s necessary to reduce room prices to maintain that occupancy, is crucial, as cruise ships earn approximately 20% of their revenue from incidentals such as on-board spa treatments, extra drinks, shore excursions and gift shop purchases. Gambling in shipboard casinos is also an important revenue generator. Carnival earned $2.33 billion in net profits in 2008, compared to $2.40 billion in 2007, and $2.28 billion during 2006.

To capture even greater profits, cruise lines are forming their own excursion tour operations, rather than leaving this business to third parties. While consumers may get better deals if they hire their own guides and drivers, cruise lines are hoping that the convenience of one-stop shopping will attract more customers to book through their tour groups. In many cases, passengers can now book excursions on the cruise lines' web sites before they even set sail. Some ships, such as the Queen Mary 2, allow passengers to book excursions through channels on their in-room televisions. Cruise lines are also offering a wider variety of excursions. In addition to the standard, guided day-long bus tours, different lines, depending on the locale of ports visited, are offering helicopter tours, dog-sledding and so-called "canopy adventures," in which customers skate along cable lines in harnessed suits over treetops. In addition to day trips, cruise lines are booking multi-day excursions and land extensions to their routes. Crystal Cruises offers trips through the rain forests of Borneo or four night excursions to Jaipur, Agra and Delhi, India. Moreover, cruise lines are spending big bucks to lure the agents who book the majority of cruise trips for customers.

But the biggest news to date may be the construction of the largest ship to date, Royal Caribbean's $1.2 billion, 5,400 passenger Oasis of the Seas. At 220,000 tons and 1,181 feet in length, the Oasis by far eclipses Royal Caribbean's previous behemoths, its three Freedom class ships that each weigh in at about 160,000 tons and carry about 4,300 passengers. The Oasis will be wider than the Panama Canal, and it will offer a plethora of revenue-generating onboard activities including ice rinks, rock climbing, carousels and themed, open-air neighborhoods in the center of the ship with gardens, restaurants, galleries and shops. The ship is planned for launch by the end of 2009. An important design feature of Carnival's latest megaships is the central courtyard, with towers of rooms surrounding each side. While the courtyard gives passengers a place to stroll, shop or dine, it also enables designers to create premium interior cabins with balconies overlooking the courtyards. This is a highly desirable improvement over interior cabins on smaller, traditional ships, as such cabins sell for much lower fares since they had no views and no portholes or balconies.

19) Convention Center Space is Expanding, but Faces Falling Attendance Rates

Historically, conventions have meant big business for major cities throughout the U.S. Analysts estimate that the American convention industry is worth $80 billion per year. Major convention sites such as Las Vegas, New York, Chicago and Orlando compete vigorously to book conventions, especially the big ones that attract tens of thousands of visitors, not to mention the money that they spend in hotels, restaurants, bars and retail outlets. Elsewhere in North America, Canada's top-notch convention centers in Toronto and Vancouver are also major contenders.

Many city planners have fallen into the belief that "if you build convention space, they will come." There is currently about 80 million square feet of convention space in North America in 434 locations. Millions of square feet of new space will be built in the next several years. At McCormick Place in Chicago alone, an $850-million expansion was completed ahead of schedule in 2007, adding more than 700,000 square feet of space, bringing total space to 2.7 million square feet. In Las Vegas, the late 2007 opening of the Palazzo hotel tower completed a 19 million square foot hotel and entertainment complex that also includes the 2.2 million square foot Sands Expo and Convention Center and the Venetian hotel and resort. More convention space, more conventions, more money, right?

Not necessarily. Many convention centers across the U.S. are experiencing significant drops in attendees. For example, convention centers in Las Vegas and Orlando were reporting drops in attendance numbers in 2008. Trade shows relating to depressed industries are the hardest hit, such as the 11% drop at the 2008 International Builders' Show in Orlando's Orange County Convention Center which had a total attendance of 92,098, down from 103,921 in 2007.

In a June 2009 survey of members, Meeting Planners International found that current business levels were much lower than one year earlier. Members also reported a greater focus on efficient meetings with a better return on the dollars invested, greater cost controls and a higher user of technology such as social media to enhance meetings and make them more effective.

The reasons for the drop naturally lie in the slowing economy and overall downturn in travel, but are exacerbated by industry consolidation, telecommunications improvements and Internet use.

There are fewer players to exhibit in many industries, due to corporate mergers. Reaching customers through phone contact and the Internet has become easier and cheaper. New customer relations management (CRM) tools have made it more effective for sales people and customer support people to keep track of current customers and potential new customers via computer databases. Better Internet-based tools, such as web conferencing and online demonstration services that include WebEx and Microsoft's Live Meeting make it effective to have collaborative sessions and sales presentations online. The trend spells trouble for convention centers and the ancillary businesses that depend on them.

On a global basis, the fastest growth in trade show and meeting business is undoubtedly in China, particularly in Hong Kong. Chinese manufacturers have a rapidly growing audience for exhibits of their wares. Business travel to India is increasing quickly as well, and the meeting sector is growing apace.

20) New Technologies Show Promise for Port and Airport Security

More than eight years after the September 11 terrorist attacks, U.S. transportation hubs continue in their efforts to keep passengers and freight safe and security costs under control. To achieve this, airports, railway stations and ports are developing new technologies and strategies. However, a plethora of security loopholes remain in the form of computer viruses, which caused the nation's third-largest railroad to temporarily shut down, and bomb threats at airports. There are also problems with disgruntled passengers complaining of long lines, the inconvenience of removing clothing such as jackets, belts and shoes and the frequency of selection for more thorough searches using metal detecting wands and pat downs.

Important developments are occurring in technology for the detection of explosives. The Sentinel II, made by British security firm Smiths Detection (www.smithsdetection.com), is currently in place at major airports throughout the U.S., plus airports in the U.K., the European Union and in Africa. As a traveler walks through a structure similar to a metal detector, the Sentinel II scans the air around the traveler and then produces an analysis that indicates the presence of explosives concealed in clothing and/or shoes. The Sentinel can scan several passengers per minute. However, as of 2009, the U.S. Transportation Security Administration (TSA) had announced plans to halt purchases of further machines such as the Sentinel due to their high cost and difficulty of maintenance.

In the meantime, several other detection systems are already widely used at airports. EDS (Explosives Detection System) machines are currently in place at hundreds of U.S. airports. EDS scans bags for unusual densities, which are typical in explosive devices. ETD (Explosives-Trace-Detection) machines, installed at all U.S. airports, can detect trace particles of explosives contained in baggage.

But computer technology alone cannot prevent all security breaches. Some officials are calling for additional background checks of airport baggage handlers and more training for security personnel. While false alarms continue to be a problem with computer-based screening devices, some weapons and explosives still occasionally slip through the system. Having personnel properly trained in passenger interviewing techniques, as well as instituting more stringent requirements for baggage handlers and airport support staff, will go a long way toward making the skies safer.

SPOTLIGHT: Black Diamond Airport Security Lanes

In 2008, a number of airports began an experiment in airport security. In airports such as Boston, Dallas (Love Field) and Houston (Hobby), passengers are encouraged to sort themselves into security lines based on their travel experience. Frequent travelers such as business people who travel more than twice per month, carry little baggage and are familiar with TSA procedures are encouraged into "Expert Travelers" lanes, coined "Black Diamond" lanes by insiders. "Casual Travelers" are those who carry multiple bags and are less familiar with TSA rules and procedures. A third lane is designated for passengers in wheelchairs and families traveling with children. Proponents like the quick walk-through in the Black Diamond lanes and the calmer, less-rushed appeal of the Casual Travelers lane. Detractors say that choosing the appropriate lane can be confusing and signage to help identify a passenger's type is limited. TSA officials at the Orlando airport say that Black Diamond lanes move 30% to 40% faster than lanes did before the change.

Port security is another hot issue. Industry analysts estimate that at any given time there are approximately 18 million cargo containers in circulation throughout the world, and any number of those containers could be vulnerable to terrorist activity.

Ports in the U.S. handle a total of about 10 million containers yearly. That number may about double by 2020. Shortly after the 9/11 attacks, the U.S. government instituted a program in which all shippers sending goods to U.S. ports must deliver an electronic manifest of every container's contents to the U.S. Customs Service 24 hours before being loaded on a ship in a foreign port. Cargos, shippers or handlers who are deemed "high risk" by the Customs Service have their associated containers x-rayed or physically searched before loading. This works out to be between 5% and 10% of all containers to arrive at U.S. ports. This system was put in place by early 2002.

In 2005, DP World, one of the world's largest operators of port terminals, created a furor in America when it acquired the P&O Steam Navigation Company of Britain. That acquisition included the management of several large freight terminals in the U.S., in locations such as Miami and New York/New Jersey. DP World is owned by the government of Dubai, one of the city-states that make up the UAE in the Arab world. DP World quickly sold its U.S. port management business to an American firm.

The DP World drama created a new debate over ownership and operation of infrastructure within ports and airports. Generally, local port authorities are governmental units that own the real estate around their shipping ports. These port authorities lease real estate to terminal operators. Frequently, these terminal operators are foreign-based, and occasionally they are even owned by foreign governments. One tally estimated that 60% of container terminals at America's highest-traffic ports are managed in whole or in part by foreign operators. However, these terminal operators have little or nothing to do with port security, which is the focus primarily of federal agencies including the Coast Guard and U.S. Customs authorities.

Potential security risks at ports are widespread, and there is a great business opportunity here for service providers and firms that can create breakthrough security technology. While aboard ships in transit or in port, containers are hardly tamperproof—it would be easy enough for someone with ill intent to add to or alter the cargo. Physical security measures in and around U.S. ports may include Coast Guard patrols, local police patrols and port security personnel, along with security cameras and lighting. Nonetheless, ports are vast, extremely busy operations, and security measures at present are sorely taxed to provide broad coverage. Meanwhile, the huge quantity of trucks and rail cars coming and going to and from ports present another immense security risk. For example, the Ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach had, at its busiest, 11,000 trucks arriving daily.

Technology offers some hope for container security. The Hong Kong Terminal Operators Association was involved in a successful pilot program, utilizing state-of-the-art scanners on every container entering either of two large container terminals by truck. While sitting on flatbed trucks, the containers are screened by an x-ray like device based on gamma-rays to look for suspicious objects. Likewise, the containers are scanned for radiation. This system, known as Integrated Container Inspection System or ICIS, was created by an American firm, Science Applications International Corp., based in San Diego. ICIS can collect and integrate data from sources such as shipping records, terminal information systems and customs intelligence. Each container's identification is scanned into a database where data on container scans and inspection are used as the basis for container tracking and intelligence.

Meanwhile, the U.S. Congress has funded a program to test containers for nuclear weapons or components before they are loaded on ships bound for the U.S. Known as the "Secure Freight Initiative," the program, which was up and running in 2007, uses both X-ray and radiation detectors on all ships leaving three ports, located in Pakistan, Honduras and Southampton (U.K.).

The big news in U.S. shipping is the Law on Maritime Cargo Scanning Requirements, signed in 2007, which will require foreign ports to scan each and every container shipped to the U.S. for weapons of explosive materials effective in 2012. Industry analysts project that each of the approximately 700 ports around the world that ship to the U.S. will have to install between one and 10 X-ray or gamma-ray scanners. With price tags hovering around $5 million per machine, foreign ports will have to make serious investments in the new equipment in order to maintain lucrative shipping routes. Scanner manufacturers include Science Applications International Corp., the U.K.'s Smiths Group PLC and China's Nuctech Co.

Other measures to increase port safety are being developed in the private sector. Several firms, including defense contractor L-3 Communications Holdings, Inc., are developing "smart boxes" that utilize sensors in containers to scan for chemicals, nuclear materials and human heartbeats. The boxes would also contain radio frequency identification (RFID) tags which contain data about the contents of the container. The sensors will scan for any changes to the contents as listed, and set off an alarm if changes are found. The boxes are powered by batteries which, according to Homeland Security department specifications, must last for 30,000 hours before replacement. The cost for the boxes, which must fall below $50 per container according to Homeland Security rules, may be a bargain in light of the fact that the system would significantly cut down on cargo theft which is estimated at $20 to $60 billion per year by the U.S. Department of Transportation.

Yet another promising cargo security project involves General Electric. Under this system, wireless sensors and transmitters are installed in a special box inside containers. The units collect data about container condition, security, humidity, internal temperature and radiation. They can even tell if a container has been dropped by a crane. That data is then sent to one of Globalstar's 43 satellites (Globalstar is a leading provider of satellite services) and transmitted along to a control center at GE. The goal is to cut down on theft and tampering, while increasing supply chain efficiency and reducing potential use of a container for terrorism. Currently, the systems cost about $1,000 per container.

IBM is testing a similar system in cooperation with A. P. Moeller-Maersk, one of the world's largest shipping firms. They were in a pilot program with 1,000 containers as of 2007 as part of a five year alliance (the alliance was extended to include further IT services at the end of 2008). In this case, data is transmitted to Iridium system satellites.

Air cargo safety is another looming issue. Freight carried on U.S. cargo and passenger airlines grew from 2.5 billion ton miles in 1980 to nearly 14 billion in 2006. World air cargo traffic grew 5.1% in 2007, according to Boeing's World Air Cargo Forecast. The San Francisco Airport has launched a program with a goal of screening 95% of the cargo placed on passenger planes leaving that airport. The program utilizes existing bomb detection technology.

21) High Speed Passenger Trains, Including Maglev, Gain New Acceptance

A number of interesting social and technological changes are taking place that will impact both business and leisure travel in the future. Train travel has long been an alternative to flying, but often not a viable one if you need to get somewhere fast. Maglev (magnetic levitation) trains are changing the status quo. After decades of research and testing, maglev trains have entered the realm of popular use, albeit on a limited scale. Thanks to powerful magnetic fields, these trains float 3/8" above their tracks. Unhindered by rail friction, they can zip along at speeds up to 310 miles per hour. In some cases, trains may be the cheapest and fastest way to provide a quick and reliable means of transport between far-reaching locations.

In Shanghai, a maglev train serves passengers between the Pudong Airport and the City Center. The 19-mile trip takes only eight minutes. Its top speed is 310 miles per hour. While many are skeptical about the widespread adoption of such trains, once infrastructures are in place, traveling by maglev train may become a popular and inexpensive option for travelers—the trains' estimated operating costs can be less than 5 cents per passenger mile, far less than most airplane flights. Another high-speed project is in the works that will offer service between Beijing and Shanghai by 2012.

In Japan, engineers are working on a maglev system called electrodynamic suspension that utilizes super-cooled superconducting electromagnets that levitate the train nearly four inches above a guideway. The technology is earmarked for use in the Chuo Shinkansen project. The train will run between Tokyo and Osaka by way of Nagoya, cost an estimated $44 billion and be completed by 2025.

France's Train a Grande Vitesse (TGV) has been providing high-speed rail service since 1981. Typical TGV trains, which are high-speed, but not maglev, travel at 180 miles per hour, but the company has tested trains at much higher speeds. The fastest non-electromagnetic train speed record to date is held by a French research model code-named V150. Built by Alstom, a French engineering firm, the prototype reached 357 miles per hour in a test in Eastern France in early 2007. In 2008, an AGV train built by Alstom underwent a series of trials in the Czech Republic to validate its record-breaking speed technology, and the first production trains are expected to be delivered in Europe in 2010.

Throughout Europe, new high-speed lines are under construction, especially in Spain. As of 2008, 2,600 miles were being laid (including 1,400 miles in Spain) with an additional 5,300 miles planned according to the International Union of Railways. While new track is being built, current service is attracting passengers in record numbers. Eurostar Group Ltd., which operates rail service in the U.K., France and Belgium, reported a 15% rise in ticket sales in the U.S. (compared to 2% passenger traffic growth for the same year for air travel, according to the Civil Aviation Authority). In Spain, a new high-speed line runs between Barcelona and Madrid at speeds up to 186 miles per hour. Rail passengers are enjoying quick service as well as departures and arrivals in urban centers rather than at outlying airports. In addition, rail lines are offering perks such as free magazines and newspapers as well as DVD rentals. Growing numbers of Spanish passengers are choosing rail over air travel. Iberia, one of the largest airlines in Spain, is planning to cut domestic flights by 7% in 2009.

Britain's government-sponsored firm High Speed 2 is studying high-speed service between London and Birmingham. Overall rail traffic has risen by 35% from 1999 through 2009. Network Rail, which maintains and develops rail infrastructure and the Association of Train Operating Companies are planning to increase capacity over the next 20 years. In addition, London's Thames-link route, general commuter lines and a number of central stations are undergoing a $9 billion expansion.

The Middle East plans to enter the realm of high-speed rail as well, in addition to constructing monorails and local metropolitan service. Kuwait and Qatar plan to invest $10 billion each while the United Arab Emirates is spending $20 billion. Probably the most ambitious plan in the region is the $15 billion earmarked in Saudi Arabia to expand its rail network by a factor of five. However, these are ambitious, long-term plans that may be slowed by low oil prices or a poor economic environment. In the long term, the Gulf Cooperation Council has agreed to plans for a railway bazaar which will connect Jordan and Oman. The beneficiaries of this investment are likely to be European rail companies which have the lion's share of expertise and experience. Industry analysts estimate that European firms including France's Alstom and Switzerland's ABB account for 70% of sales in railway design, construction and operations.

In the meantime, other technologies for high-speed trains might eventually be used in several U.S. cities, although the U.S. remains far behind the rest of the world. Advanced trains, boasting speeds above 200 miles per hour, are under study for routes between San Diego and Sacramento. (This route would include service between Los Angeles and San Francisco. A ride along this 390-mile stretch would take just two hours and 25 minutes, reduce annual highway traffic by 2 million cars and annual greenhouse gas emissions by 12 million tons.) Another proposed route is between the cities of Anaheim, California and Las Vegas, Nevada, a distance of 269 miles with a projected cost of $12 billion. Despite the obvious advantages of regional high-speed trains in the U.S., including energy efficiency, low pollution output and relief for crowded airports and highways, funding remains uncertain. Congress passed legislation in June 2008 that awards Amtrak $2 billion to $3 billion for the next five to six years (in comparison to the $2.7 given to the FAA and $10 billion to the Federal Highway Administration). In November 2009, U.S. voters approved a number of transit initiatives, including $9 billion in bonds to support the development of a train in California that will run at speeds in excess of 220 miles per hour.

President Obama's $787 billion stimulus package, which was signed into law in February 2009, contains $8 billion earmarked for high-speed rail. However, that amount will be divided among 11 U.S. regions, diluting the amount to the extent that many rail industry analysts believe that little progress can be made. The Fly California bullet train project, for example, has a projected cost of $45 billion.

Amtrak, the long maligned federally-supported railway in the U.S., has posted surprising traffic gains in 2006, 2007 and 2008 thanks to Acela Express, a train system that runs predominantly between major cities in the northeast with top speeds of up to 150 miles per hour. Amtrak has seen passenger numbers surge from 2000, when it had 45% of the passenger market between New York and Washington D.C., to 56% by mid-2008. Likewise, the Boston-New York route's market share has grown from 27% to 41% in the same period. In addition to the Acela's speed, train travel is growing rapidly in the U.S. due to the higher cost of filling up a passenger car or truck with gasoline, as well as the higher cost of airline tickets.

Japan has been a long-term investor in train systems. Its Shinkansen bullet trains form one of the fastest passenger transportation networks in the world, topping speeds of 220 mph. Korea is also building a high-speed network between its most populous cities, including Pusan, Seoul and Taegu, in a project estimated to cost $17 billion and due for completion in 2010. China has committed itself to linking all of its major cities by high-speed train as well, and has even considered widespread use of cutting-edge magnetic trains.

22) Self-Check-In Kiosks, RFID and Other New Technologies Save Labor Costs for Airlines and Hotels

Most airlines operate self-check-in kiosks at terminals, where the swipe of a credit card supplies a traveler with his or her boarding pass. Another idea under consideration is generic kiosks at airports so that the same kiosks can serve all passengers, no matter which airline they're flying. In the future, smart cards, containing secure personal information, may become important time savers. Travelers might use the cards as boarding passes, to manage luggage and as identification at airports.

Alaska Air Group has made great strides in upgrading and streamlining its check-in process. Its main terminal at Ted Stevens Anchorage International Airport opened with only one small traditional ticket counter and a large number of self-service check-in machines and manned baggage drop stations. Customers can print boarding passes (if they didn't print them ahead of time using the company's web site) and drop luggage if necessary without standing in long lines. The system has doubled the carrier's capacity (about 1.2 million average annual passengers) in the terminal and halved its staffing needs. Customers also save time and effort. Alaska Air helped build a similar terminal at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport, which handles 7.2 million Alaska Air and Horizon Air (an Alaska Air subsidiary) passengers each year. The 2007-2008 renovation cost about $28 million, $18 million being funded by the airline and $10 million by the airport.

Delta completed a similar renovation of its check-in system at Hartsfield-Jackson Atlanta International Airport in 2007. The cost was $26 million, and the upgrade substantially cut check-in times and carved 50% more usable space from the same amount of terminal square footage.

Luggage tags will also become "smart." Rather than bar-coded tags that are common today, the new tags will be embedded with radio frequency identification chips (RFID) containing information about the passenger and his or her flight. As luggage moves along the conveyor belt, scanners supplied with information about the airport's flight schedule will read the luggage and forward it to the correct plane or divert it if a flight is delayed or cancelled. Delta Air Lines hopes to implement RFID into baggage tags to reduce the number of misdirected or lost bags. The estimated price for company-wide implementation, including the tags, readers and software, is $25 million. Delta claims, however, that it loses approximately $100 million every year settling claims and locating misplaced luggage. The company has run several extensive tests on RFID. In another example, at McCarran International Airport in Las Vegas, baggage was typically delivered with a painfully low level of 89% accuracy using a barcode system. A test of an RFID system resulted in 99.7% accuracy, leaving the airport eager to give the project the go-ahead. McCarran spent $125 million (75% of which is being underwritten by the Transportation Security Administration) to implement the new system, which assigns unique numbers used for storing data about bag owners, origins and destinations. The data is stored in centralized databases. McCarran is using disposable RFID tags provided by Motorola's Symbol unit (formerly Symbol Technologies).

A slightly different system was recently tested at Narita Airport outside Tokyo, Japan. Its tags are more sophisticated in that the tags themselves store data as opposed to centralized databases. Airports in Hong Kong and Philadelphia are also implementing RFID projects. Alien Technology Corp. (www.alientechnology.com) has run an RFID system test at San Francisco International Airport.

Industry analysts estimate that RFID systems could accurately identify bags at a 95% success rate, which would eliminate two-thirds of the lost bags problem. The monetary savings would be as high as $650 million per year. The problem with RFID is the expensive startup costs, which are serious obstacles to cash-strapped U.S. airline companies.

e-tickets and self-check-in kiosks are rapidly becoming part of the new air travel paradigm. Almost all airlines are using bar-coded tickets, as opposed to magnetic strip tickets, so that passengers can print out boarding passes themselves. There are major cost savings in such measures. An e-ticket costs less than $1 to process, versus $6 to $8 for a paper ticket. The practice also allows greater flexibility for passengers who make last-minute changes in baggage checks and seat assignments.

Hotels are becoming smarter, too. Self-check-in kiosks in the lobbies of hotels are proliferating at a great rate, include all Hilton hotels. In a growing number of hotels, with the permission of their customers, profiles of customer preferences ranging from room temperature to mattress position to music tastes are kept on file. Hotel groups can share that information with other hotel brands under their management. They are also more energy-efficient, using lighting and heating systems that can detect a human presence and shut off when the person leaves the room. In addition, hotel employees are equipped with wireless personal digital assistants to closely monitor customers' needs.

23) Self Service Retail and Travel Technologies Take Off

Self-Service Checkout

Another innovation that has been growing rapidly in store use is the automated self-checkout kiosk. Thousands of these machines are in use in traditional retail stores, notably in major chains such as Kroger, Albertson's, Wal-Mart and Home Depot. Most major airlines have now installed similar automated kiosks for checking in passengers, saving significant overhead necessary to support ticket agents.

Though initially avoided by many shoppers because of worries about mistakes and complications, these clerk-less checkout lanes have been gaining popularity and have become the preferred method of checkout for many customers, especially after they have used them many times. Automated checkout machines have attracted a certain amount of ire, however. From the consumer perspective, older shoppers dislike the increasing lack of human interaction that began with the automated use of such systems as voice mail and has culminated in this new technology, which completely replaces customer relations with clerks. Of course, for retailers, installing these devices is simply good business. The machines pay for themselves in nine to 12 months, as the cost saved in labor alone is enormous.

Self-Service Kiosks turn into Super Vending Machines

A San Francisco startup company called Zoom Systems (www.zoomsystems.com) is placing extra-large vending machines, referred to as robotic retail store networks, in locations such as airports, hotels, office campuses and universities across the U.S. Instead of offering drinks and snacks, these machines typically offer up to 120 high-dollar items such as iPods, digital cameras, headphones and wireless laptop cards. Each machine is about 40 square feet in size. Users choose a product using a touch screen that displays detailed product information. A robotic arm retrieves a selected item and deposits it in a bin, at which time the user's credit card is charged. With hundreds of machines in place, Zoom is betting that consumers will have few problems with spending as much as $500 at a vending machine. Early results are promising, as the machines generate between $60,000 and $240,000 in annual sales per location.

Zoom had 780 ZoomShops in place by late 2008, in the U.S. and Japan. Just as ZoomShops can be customized to locations, they can also be customized to brands. For example, a cosmetics company could customize a Zoom Shop so that it carried the look and feel of the brand and offered the best of its product line. Because the stores are located in high traffic consumer areas, these customized stores can provide branding opportunities as well.

Another growing use for vending machines is for DVD rentals. Many companies build and sell these machines, which are generally stocked by the owner with films and television programs in DVD format. Users charge the rental fees to credit cards. Redbox Automated Retail LLC is a leader in this field. Redbox is a venture owned by a subsidiary of McDonald's Corporation and Coinstar, Inc. There are 10,000 Redbox kiosks in locations such as McDonald's restaurants, in addition to supermarkets and other high traffic locations that offer a selection of about 500 DVDs each for a $1 rental fee. RedBox expects the self-service DVD rental market to grow to $3 billion by 2009, and it is positioning itself to have a major market share. Redbox is very user-friendly. For example, it charges no late fees. The company also offers an online movie rental service.

Size Scanners

For those looking for better fit in a brick and mortar setting, there's the Virtual Fitting Room (VFR) by Intellifit (www.intellifit.com), a private company outside of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The VFR is a high-tech scanning booth that promises to scan customers for their exact measurements for use in making custom jeans. The process takes about 20 seconds, and is the result of technology developed by a U.S. Department of Energy research facility. Intellifit is currently test-marketing its custom-made jeans service, and hopes to expand to offer custom-made shirts, pants and other clothing. The firm also hopes to develop relationships with ready-made garment sellers to improve the fit of off-the-rack clothes.

Virtual Sales Associate Kiosks

Intel, in partnership with a creative design firm in San Francisco, California called Frog Design, Inc. (www.frogdesign.com), is working on a prototype of an apparel kiosk that will serve as a virtual sales associate. To be used in department and other clothing stores, this kiosk enables shoppers to stand before a counter with two touch-screens, one at eye level and the other embedded in a waist-high counter.

Wave a personal card (similar to shopping cards issued by grocery stores) before one of the screens and the system recognizes the shopper and has access to data regarding previous purchases. Wave the tag of a shirt from the store and the system displays information about coordinating pants, skirts, shorts or accessories for sale in the store; data regarding previous purchases that will complement the new shirt; and available discounts or sales prices that may apply. Intel hopes to outsource the building of these kiosks. Similar systems are being developed by other firms, including IBM's Virtual Mirror for assistance with cosmetics purchases (IBM is working with EZface on the project); and Microsoft which is also working on an apparel concept.

24) Las Vegas Hotel Construction Boom Slows While Housing Sales Plummet

The building boom that characterized Las Vegas through 2007 was unprecedented in U.S. hotel development history. Huge growth at the resort casinos that line the Las Vegas strip and sprawl far beyond into the Nevada desert spurred a housing boom in addition to the construction of some of the world's largest and most expensive commercial real estate. However, the boom has come to a halt. In 2008, the Echelon, a $4.8 billion hotel and casino tower complex planned to open on the strip in 2011, was dropped and the site put up for sale when developers were unable to raise enough funding. In November 2008, construction on the St. Regis Residences on the Strip stopped when owner Las Vegas Sands Corp. announced plans to concentrate on the completion of other projects. The $2.9 billion, 3,815 room Fontainebleau stands unfinished after its declaration of bankruptcy in 2009.

Las Vegas is by far and away the city with the largest number of hotel rooms in the U.S. As of 2009, there were 141,030 rooms, according to the Center for Business and Economic Research at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. An additional 45,000 new rooms were expected by 2012, although analysts at Deutsche Bank AG report that more than 23,000 hotel or condo-hotel rooms have been cancelled or suspended. As of 2009, it was exceedingly difficult to obtain financing for development projects in Las Vegas. Las Vegas is also home to the largest hotels in the world, with 15 of the world's 20 largest hotel properties. Occupancy rates on weekends across the city hovered around 95%, and stayed near 100% at the newer hotels through mid-2007. More recently, however, business has been extremely disappointing in Las Vegas.

Airlines, suffering from their own problems, have cut the number of flights arriving there. Tourist visits have been declining just at the same time that massive new hotels, such as annexes to the Wynn and the Venetian, were opening. As a result, hotel owners, even at the most luxurious and newest hotels, are aggressively lowering prices and offering discount packages. Casino revenues declined sharply in 2008. Hotel occupancy fell from 89.4% overall in 2008 to 82.2% in mid 2009 according to the Las Vegas Convention and Visitors Authority.

Top Las Vegas properties include Bellagio, Mandalay Bay, The Palazzo and the multi-billion dollar Wynn Las Vegas. Despite the global economic crisis and the construction slow-down, Wynn Resorts Limited opened a $2.3 billion second resort, named Encore, on the strip next to its original Wynn hotel in December 2008. MGM Mirage is still constructing the most expensive private development project ever built in the U.S. Called CityCenter, the 66-acre project includes two 400-room boutique style hotels, a drug store, dry cleaner, gourmet supermarket and (of course) a 4,000-room hotel-casino designed by world-famous architect Cesar Pelli. The projected cost of the venture is $7 billion. MGM Mirage pulled in conglomerate Dubai World as a major partner to help underwrite the cost. However, a condominium segment of the project was cancelled in early 2009 amid construction problems, financing difficulties and a weak condo market. Meanwhile, the developer has been forced to scramble in order to maintain sufficient financing commitments to complete the project. In April 2009, the firm announced that it had settled a dispute with Dubai World and that the project's lenders had agreed to fund $1.8 billion in loan proceeds required to complete the project by late 2009.

After a faulty attempt at positioning Las Vegas as a destination for the entire family in the 1990s, the desert city has been repositioned as one of the world's most visited, and therefore most lucrative, destinations for adults—that is, for adults seeking a cutting-edge experience in gaming, dining, shopping, partying and showroom entertainment in a sexy, sinful atmosphere. Lured by ads such as the “What happens in Vegas, stays in Vegas” campaigns, total visitors in 2007 reached 39.1 billion, up from just under 39 million in 2006. Total visitors in 2008 fell by 4.4% to 37.5 million, with a same month drop of 14.2% in December 2008 from December 2007.

In addition to acres of slot machines, black jack tables and roulette wheels, Las Vegas is teeming with new versions of famous restaurants, luxe shopping boutiques and world-class entertainment. Internationally known singers, dancers and comedians share the stage with several different permanent shows by the Cirque du Soleil troupe of acrobats, clowns and musicians. Las Vegas hotels and casinos make roughly one-half their net profits through non-gambling activities.

The housing boom that accompanied the enormous commercial construction projects peaked in 2005, when 5,000 to 6,000 people per month were relocating to the city to take advantage of the growing economy. Annual gains in median home prices peaked at 40.1% in 2004, but slowed to about 2.2% in 2006. By 2007, the party was over, with Las Vegas housing prices in January falling by 19.3% over the same month in 2006. Housing prices overall for 2008 fell 29.4% from the previous year. Meanwhile, the state of Nevada, as of 2009, was suffering from one of the highest home mortgage foreclosure rates in America, and statewide unemployment soared to 10.4% in March 2009, compared to 5.6% in March 2008.

25) Aging Baby Boomers Will Cause Significant Changes in the Leisure Sector, Including Sports and Activity-Based Travel

The term “baby boomer” generally refers to someone born in the U.S. or Western Europe from 1946 to 1964. The term evolved to describe the children of soldiers and war industry workers who were involved in World War II. When those veterans and workers returned to civilian life, they started or added to families in large numbers. As a result, the baby boom generation is one of the largest demographic segments in the U.S., at about 76 million people as of 2009. Some baby boomers have already started reaching early retirement age. In 2006, the first of the boomers reached 60, a common early retirement age. In 2011, millions will begin turning traditional retirement age (65), resulting in extremely rapid growth in the senior portion of the population. The baby boom segment will have distinct requirements that should be considered by businesses that want to succeed in evolving markets. A major consideration will be the fact that many boomers will attempt to reap the health benefits of exercise for the first time in years, if not for the first time in their lives. Aerobic activity will become vital to those who want to maintain healthy lifestyles, but activities and equipment must be adapted to aging bodies. For example, leaders in the bicycle marketplace are introducing a growing number of models that enable older riders to sit more upright, while leaning over less. Bicycle seats and suspension that are kinder to older bodies will sell well.

Firms that design and make equipment for high-impact or repetitive-motion sports will be striving to create equipment that is easier on older joints and muscles. For example, golf clubs or tennis rackets that have bigger sweet spots or provide more power with less effort in the stroke are logical products for this market.

Lower-impact sports and exercise will gain in favor. Swimming, power walking and day hiking should all have bright futures, as should the firms that manufacture equipment for these activities. Exercise and gym equipment makers will do well to make lines of equipment adapted to, or specifically for, older users. For example, instruction labels on gym equipment will need to have larger font sizes so that the type will be easy for older eyes to read. Softer, more ergonomic grips on weights and other gym equipment make sense. Activities that are easy for older people to enter for the first time will prosper in this market. Pilates and yoga, when taught in a manner suitable for stiffer, older bodies, could continue to boom.

Travel and tours centered on sports and recreation activities will continue to do well, especially where at least some venues are tailored to appeal to older participants. The exploding number of affluent, retired consumers will be looking for healthy activities and recreation on their travels. Tours that combine cycling, hiking, walking and other activities of moderate intensity make sense in this market, and demand will grow sharply. Tours that combine hiking or cycling with luxury accommodations or unique lodging in pristine remote settings (including the rapidly growing trend of ecotourism) will find large numbers of customers. Sporting goods manufacturers would do well to provide sponsorships and test equipment to tour operators and should seek ways to offer seminars and sports instruction that fit neatly with the growing activity-based tour business. They will do especially well to target the 60+ age segment with marketing, products and services tailored to that group.

Tours that offer participation in cultural activities, environmental projects and educational opportunities will also enjoy soaring growth. Many travelers want to do much more than relax or shop while on tours—they want to get to know and understand the local people, help solve local problems and enrich their own lives in the process.

Members of the baby boom generation aren't the only seniors in the market for sports, recreation, fitness and travel. As of July 2008, Americans older than the baby boom set numbered more than 40 million, including 11.4 million who were 80 years of age or more (92 thousand of them were 100 or older).

26) The Future of Travel

Over the mid-term, the number of travelers worldwide will soar. Despite the slow global economy of 2008-2009, the middle class will grow fairly quickly on a worldwide basis, and the number of people traveling for the first time, especially in lesser-developed nations, will rise dramatically. For example, London's Heathrow Airport expects its passenger count to double over 20 years.

For U.S. commercial air carriers alone, the FAA projects that revenue passenger enplanements will rise from 679.6 million domestic and 77.8 international passengers in 2008 to 857.8 million domestic and 120.5 million international in 2020. This is a 50% growth in international passengers over a 12-year period.

Smaller aircraft will continue to grow in abundance, potentially crowding the skies and creating new challenges for air controllers. Meanwhile, the advent of the A380 jumbo jet capable of carrying 550 to 800 passengers will encourage even higher numbers of international travelers flying at bargain-basement ticket prices.

New breakthroughs in passenger train technology, backed by immense investments by government transportation agencies, will change the face of train travel in many nations as ultrafast trains are introduced in high-traffic areas. Since today's very high price of gasoline makes automobile travel very costly, even more impetus will be placed on development of new train routes.

Travel futurists may look forward to extremely exotic travel venues, thanks to advancing technologies. For mega-millionaires, ocean travel and space travel promise incredible new experiences. U.S. Submarines, Inc. offers wealthy clients an array of personal luxury submarines. At 65 meters long with 5,000 square feet of space, the Phoenix 1000 is the size of a large house.

Space tourism is slowly becoming a reality. In 2001, the first fee-paying space tourist, Dennis Tito, visited the International Space Station for seven days, by purchasing very expensive space travel arrangements through a Russian organization. A handful of additional tourists have taken the Russian space route.

Later, SpaceShipOne's manned space flight in June 2004 gave new hope to a future in commercial tourism of outer space. SpaceShipOne was the first privately built aircraft to fly a person into space. Scaled Composites, the company that built the aircraft, had funding from Microsoft co-founder Paul Allen.

These early successes led to the start of Virgin Galactic, a company that will use craft similar to SpaceShipOne to carry six passengers to 68 miles altitude for flights of about two and one-half hours. A new space port for the project will be near Albuquerque, New Mexico.

For the well-heeled and for corporations with significant travel budgets, fractional ownership of aircraft, yachts, hotel/condos and resort homes will continue to be popular.

Meanwhile, one of the biggest single influences on the travel industry will be the very large numbers of Baby Boomers reaching retirement age in the U.S., along with rapidly aging populations in Europe, Japan and elsewhere. These are people who will have the time and the money to travel extensively for years and years to come. For example, nearly 76 million Baby Boomers are in the United States as of 2009, and the oldest of them started turning 60 in 2006. By 2011, they will start turning the traditional retirement age of 65, and their leisure travel will eventually increase significantly.

An additional major influence on the travel industry, for now and for decades to come, is the rapid rise of millions of business professionals and members of the middle class in India and China. The extremely rapid economic growth of those nations will continue to create immense new demand for travel services in two ways. First, business and investment professionals will be traveling more and more to and from China and India, promoting new deals and securing sales of goods and services. Demand for travel services, from ground transport, to business-class hotels, to train and airline service will continue to grow at a brisk pace. At the same time, rising discretionary income among middle and upper end consumers in India and China will drive one of the biggest booms in international tourism ever seen in the history of the tourism sector.

Increased use of information technologies will be either a nuisance or a convenience to travelers, depending on their frame of reference. RFID, smart ID cards and self-check-in will proliferate in an effort to reduce the number of man hours required to handle a given number of passengers. Travelers will be exposed to an ever-growing range of technology-enhanced security and surveillance devices in a never-ending effort to thwart terrorists and crackpots.

The world of travel will grow and change rapidly. The most challenged travelers will be those seeking remote, tranquil getaways—far from the maddening, traveling hordes.

Domestic Airline Jet Fuel Prices, U.S.: 1990-2009

(Monthly Data in Dollars per Gallon)

Jet Fuel Price by Type of Service	Apr-08	Apr-09
Nonscheduled airlines (dollars per gallon)	3.35	1.72
Percent change from same month previous year	58.02	-48.66
Scheduled airlines (dollars per gallon)	2.97	1.74
Percent change from same month previous year	53.09	-41.41

Notes: Jet fuel prices reported to the Bureau of Transportation Statistics differ from producer prices. Reports to BTS show the cost per gallon of fuel used by an airline during the month rather than the price charged by a producer on a single day. Fuel costs for scheduled airline services reflect contractual and storage advantages available to large buyers, while fuel costs for nonscheduled airline services reflect economic conditions for smaller buyers. Jet fuel prices also reflect seasonality due to both the seasonality of aviation and because jet fuel has similar refining requirements to heating oil. The current value is compared to the value from the same period in the previous year to account for seasonality. Data is for domestic services.

Along with other data, VMT are often used in estimating congestion, air quality, and potential gas-tax revenues, and can provide a general measure of the level of the nation's economic activity. The current value is compared to the value from the same period in the previous year to account for seasonality.

Chapter 4

THE TRAVEL 300: WHO THEY ARE AND HOW THEY WERE CHOSEN

Includes Indexes by Company Name, Industry & Location, And a Complete Table of Sales, Profits and Ranks

The companies chosen to be listed in PLUNKETT'S AIRLINE, HOTEL & TRAVEL INDUSTRY ALMANAC comprise a unique list. THE TRAVEL 300 (the actual count is 332 companies) were chosen specifically for their dominance in the many facets of travel and tourism in which they operate. Complete information about each firm can be found in the "Individual Profiles," beginning at the end of this chapter. These profiles are in alphabetical order by company name.

THE TRAVEL 300 includes leading companies from all parts of the United States as well as Europe, Asia/Pacific, Canada, Mexico and South America, and from all travel and tourism related industry segments: travel agencies; transportation carriers of all types, including major airlines, railroads and cruise lines; specialized service companies that are vital to the travel and tourism field, such as hotel management companies and online reservations firms; and many others.

Simply stated, the list contains 332 of the largest, most successful, fastest growing firms in travel and related industries in the world. To be included in our list, the firms had to meet the following criteria:

- 1) Generally, these are corporations based in the U.S.; however, the headquarters of 154 firms are located in other nations.
- 2) Prominence, or a significant presence, in travel and supporting fields. (See the following Industry Codes section for a complete list of types of businesses that are covered).
- 3) The companies in THE TRAVEL 300 do not have to be exclusively in the travel and tourism field.
- 4) Financial data and vital statistics must have been available to the editors of this book, either directly from the company being written about or from outside sources deemed reliable and accurate by the editors. A small number of companies that we would like to have included are not listed because of a lack of sufficient, objective data.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

AAA, a nonprofit organization, offers auto-related services to over 51 million members in North America. Founded in 1902 as the American Automobile Association, it operates as a national network of independent clubs that provide reciprocal services across all regions. Region-specific web sites can be accessed through AAA.com. AAA offers standard and premium AAA Auto Club and AAA Motor Club members roadside assistance including towing, locksmith services, emergency fuel delivery, battery charging and medical assistance. Even though individual clubs are divided into regions, members call for help using the same toll-free number, 1-800-AAA-HELP. Besides roadside service, AAA offers other benefits including accident insurance, car theft rewards, legal fee reimbursements, medical expense coverage, international maps, car rentals, route support and vehicle inspections. Members also receive discounts and other benefits at over 150,000 partner businesses, including retail outlets, travel companies, hotels and Disneyland Resorts. AAA publishes TripTik maps, which provide detailed travel instructions customized to individual schedules and plans, and TourBook guides, steering members through destinations in the U.S., Canada, Mexico and the Caribbean. AAA Travel Services, one of the largest travel agencies in the U.S., operates more than 1,000 travel agencies throughout the U.S. and Canada, and provides members with travel benefits in 110 countries. Agents are equipped to help customers find lodging and car rentals; book flights, cruises and packaged deals; and offer general advice and travel tips. The organization offers insurance packages that cover home ownership, other personal assets, life insurance and, of course, auto insurance, which also includes special protection in foreign countries. It also offers financial services, including AAA-branded Visa credit cards, auto loans and refinancing, issuing traveler's checks and currency exchange.

AAA employee benefits depend on individual locations, but agencies generally offer credit union membership, travel and amusement park discounts and free AAA membership.

Aercap Holdings NV is a global aviation company which provides aircraft and engine leasing, trading and parts sales. The firm also maintains several certified repair stations, through which it provides maintenance, overhaul and disassembly services for aircrafts and engines. Aercap, 45.8% owned by Cerberus Capital Management, conducts business globally, providing aircraft and parts for customers in every geographical region. Headquartered in Amsterdam, the firm also has international offices in Ireland, the U.K. and China, as well as U.S. offices in Texas, Florida and Arizona. Aercap's portfolio consists of approximately 314 aircrafts and 74 engines that are either owned, on order, under contract or letter of intent, or managed by the company. Aercap leases most of its aircraft under operating leases to approximately 100 commercial airlines and cargo operator customers in 48 countries. Over half of Aercap's sales typically come from its U.S. clients. The company's trading ventures involve the acquisition of engines by purchasing aircrafts. Aercap then removes and remodels the engines, deconstructs the old airframes, and sells dissembled parts. The firm also offers a range of asset services for aircraft owners, financiers and investors, including remarketing, purchasing and selling aircraft; technical and contract management; financial engineering; and securitization services. The firm's U.S.-based subsidiary, AeroTurbine, Inc., specializes in aftermarket commercial aircraft engines and parts sales. In July 2008, Aercap entered into an agreement with Airbus Freighter Conversions GmbH to convert 30 Airbus A320s and A321s from passenger to freighter aircraft. In December 2008, the company sold two aircraft to Waha Leasing, an operating unit of Waha Capital. In February 2009, U.S. subsidiary AeroTurbine, Inc. entered into a five-year agreement to provide engine and airframe components to aviation maintenance company Aveos.

Aeroflot Russian Airlines JSC, majority owned by the government of Russia, is a Russian air carrier. It offers service to 93 destinations in 47 countries around the world, including numerous routes connecting Russia with the CIS (Commonwealth of Independent States) and Baltic nations. In addition, Aeroflot provides direct service to Moscow from five U.S. cities. With a fleet of 81 aircraft, including Boeing 767 and Airbus A-320 jets, the airline and its subsidiaries carry over 9 million passengers, 145,000 tons of cargo and over 3 million tons of mail per year. The company is set to expand this fleet with 22 Airbus A350s and 22 Boeing 787s, with deliveries beginning in 2014. In addition, it provides intermodal shipping and logistics services through its Aeroflot Truck Plus program. The company has numerous code-sharing agreements with airlines operating in Eastern Europe and Asia. The company is a member of the SkyTeam Alliance, whose members include Delta Airlines, Air France, Continental and Korean Air, among others. As most carriers fly around Russia to avoid over-flight fees, the airline expects to double cargo revenues in three years, since it has a 3-4 hour flying time advantage over international carriers on the Europe/Asia route. The Russian government currently owns 51% of the firm, with legal entities and individuals owning the remaining 49%. Aeroflot has two subsidiaries, Aeroflot-Don and Aeroflot-Nord. The company recently completed construction on a new terminal at Sheremetyevo Airport in Moscow, in order to serve its increased fleet and the flights of other SkyTeam partners.

Air Berlin PLC & Co. Luftverkehrs KG is one of Germany's top holiday airlines. It operates daily flights from German airports to Palma de Majorca in the Mediterranean, as well as regular service to major vacation spots on the Mediterranean coast, the Canary Islands, Portugal and North Africa. In total, the company flies to 96 destinations, with a fleet of 131 aircraft that is one of the youngest (4.6 years on average) in the world. Many of the carrier's flights cost as little as $39 one-way. Its Euro Shuttle service connects nine airports in Germany to major European cities such as London, Rome, Amsterdam, Zurich and Barcelona. Air Berlin has been expanding dramatically, focusing on its services as a low-cost European airline over its holiday flights. It has added new routes across Europe (to Paris, Helsinki and Copenhagen, among other cities), positioned London as a new hub and has announced its intent to purchase new Airbus 320s and 319s. The firm's frequent flyer program, the topbonus program, allows customers to collect miles on all flights with Air Berlin and topbonus partner airlines. Benefits include a greater free baggage allowance, free seat reservation and more. The company recently obtained a 49% stake in Belair Airlines AG, a Swiss airline. Additional subsidiaries include LTU, which operates business, medium- and long-haul flights; LGW, a regional carrier; and NIKI, an Austrian budget airline. In March 2009, Air Berlin and TUI Travel PLC signed a strategic alliance in which Air Berlin will acquire 17 of TUIfly's 38 aircraft and absorb its city flight capabilities. The two companies will each receive a 20% reciprocal stake.

Air Partner plc, formerly Air London, is one of the largest aircraft charter companies in the world, with 22 offices in 15 countries spread throughout North America, Europe, Asia and the Middle East. The company provides executive charter service (with corporate jets, executive jet-props and helicopters), commercial aircraft and urgent freight service. In addition, Air Partner provides 24-hour-a-day operations service for all client flights. Moreover, the firm offers specialty services for royalty, government, military, automotive groups, emergency planning, celebrity tours, conferences, orchestras and crisis and relief flights. The company also offers carbon-neutral flights, with optional carbon offset costs offered standard in any proposal. These additional costs are invested in a carbon-neutral project that has included heat recovery in China, hydraulic power in China, solar generation in India and agricultural methane capture in Germany. Following the September 11th terrorist attacks, Air Partner launched CharterPLUS, a service for corporate clients and group travel organizers, which provides added financial protection for booked charter flights. Under the plan, the company promises to provide a replacement aircraft at no extra cost if a contracted airline experiences a failure before or during a trip. Air Partner has been granted a Royal Warrant by Queen Elizabeth II of England, becoming the first aviation company to receive this honor. The warrant entitles Air Partner to display the Royal Arms together with the words By Appointment. In February 2008, the company announced plans to begin expansion at London Biggin Hill Airport for the construction of a 175,000-square-foot private jet enclave. The expansion is expected to cost approximately $13.6 million.

AirAsia Berhad is the operating company for AirAsia, a short-haul discount airline based in Malaysia. The airline operates a fleet of 72 aircraft that travel to 61 destinations. The carrier flies over 100 routes across 11 countries in Asia and serves destinations such as Singapore; Bali, Indonesia; Phnom Penh, Cambodia; Bangkok, Thailand; Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia; Ho Chi Minh City, Vietnam; Hong Kong; and Macau, China. Costs are kept low by selling paperless tickets over the Internet, keeping luxury travel services to a minimum and servicing, fast aircraft turnaround and maintaining only one type of aircraft. AirAsia focuses on millions of potential customers who cannot afford full-service air travel and may never have flown before. Through wholly-owned subsidiary AirAsia Go Holiday Sdn Bhd, the carrier offers Go Holiday, an online program in which customers may book holiday packages and special promotions. This subsidiary also packages travel services through its GoMedic, GoCar and GoHostel programs. The company's other subsidiaries include Crunchtime Culinary Services Sdn Bhd, offering in-flight meals; AirAsia International, Ltd., an investment holding company; and AirAsia Mauritius, Ltd., which provides aircraft leasing facilities. The AirAsia X is a longer range service (flight times of over four hours) that is similarly geared at being a low-price alternative. Destinations include Australia, China, India, Korea, Japan, the Middle East and Europe. The AirAsia X brand mostly uses the Airbus A330, which has more seats than the standard service's Airbus A320.

AirAsia offers its employees concession travel benefits, hospitalization and surgery benefits, personal accident insurance, paternity leave, staff flight coupons and career progression opportunities.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Airbus SAS, a subsidiary of European Aeronautic Defense and Space Company (EADS), competes head-to-head with Boeing in the commercial aircraft sector. Airbus's single-aisle and wide-body jets have capacities ranging from 100 to over 500 passengers. The firm maintains 160 field sites around the globe, 16 production facilities in Europe, engineering and sales locations in North America, sales and customer support centers in Japan and China and a joint engineering center in Russia with Kaskol. Subsidiaries include Airbus North America, Airbus China and Airbus Japan. The firm also holds a 64% share in Airbus Military SL, a company responsible for the A400M, a military aircraft used in nine countries. The firm's A380 jumbo jet model, with 525 seats, burns 17% less fuel per seat than today's largest aircraft. The craft is also significantly quieter than other large aircraft. The A350 XWB, an extra wide body plane designed to compete with the new high-efficiency Boeing 787, is slated for availability in 2013, has seating capacities ranging from 270-350. Airbus recently announced plans to cut 10,000 European jobs by 2011. In February 2009, the company introduced a new freight and cargo business unit to house its freighter aircraft production and to support the passenger-to-cargo conversions of its jetliners. The firm recently signed a lucrative $35 billion contract with the U.S. Air Force for the production of 179 KC-45A tankers, replacing the military's KC-135 aircraft that have performed the country's vital military air-to-air refueling missions for more than 40 years.

There are 85 different nationalities represented and over 20 languages spoken among Airbus employees. English is the company's working language.

The agreement offers AirTran's customers a through-ticketing option for international travel. AirTran also works with Frontier Airlines to refer passengers when desired destinations are not offered, and frequent flyer points can be earned and redeemed with either company. In October 2008, the firm began offering services to Cancun. In 2009, the firm began offering Sky Bites, a variety of snack food items served a la carte with prices ranging from $1 to $4, or packages ranging from $4 to $6.

Employees are offered medical, dental and life insurance; travel benefits; short- and long-term disability coverage; flexible spending accounts; a 401(k) plan; a stock purchase plan; and a 529 college savings plan.

(Horizon), provides passenger air service to approximately 25 million passengers per year to roughly 100 destinations. The firm also provides freight and mail services, primarily to and within the state of Alaska and on the West Coast. Approximately 91% of Horizon's 2008 revenue passenger miles were flown domestically, primarily in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and California. The Canada market generated 8% of its 2008 revenue passenger miles. In August 2008, Alaska completed its transition to an all-Boeing 737 fleet.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Alitalia-Linee Aeree Italiane S.p.A. is an Italian airline company in operation since 1947. In Italy, Alitalia serves approximately 74 destinations with over 2,500 flights per week through six airports: Rome Fiumicino, Milan, Turin, Venice, Naples and Catania. In the rest of Europe, its coverage extends to 49 destinations. The company flies more than 200 flights per week to 14 other airports throughout the world. Alitalia is a member of the SkyTeam international alliance of leading airlines in Europe and around the world, including Northwest; KLM; Air France; AeroMexico; CSA Czech Airlines; Continental; Delta; and Korean Air. The network serves more than 725 destinations in more than 130 countries. The company has one primary hub airport, Rome Fiumicino, and its fleet consists of approximately 148 aircraft. The airline uses a separate company, Alitalia Servizi, for aircraft maintenance, airport services, IT services and telecommunications duties. Alitalia Servizi is a company jointly owned by Alitalia and Fintecna S.p.A. The airline is currently in the process of seeking financing to avoid shutting down. This will almost certainly involve a restructuring of the airline. In August 2008, the firm took bankruptcy under a special Italian law that enabled it to sell off the most promising business units to investors, while liquidating other operations. In January 2009, the firm emerged from bankruptcy under new, private ownership. As part of the new organization, Alitalia began merging operations with Air One. In addition, Air France-KLM took a 25% minority stake in the firm. In May 2009, Alitalia was reestablished as a member of the International Air Transport Association (IATA), which represents 93% of all scheduled air traffic globally.

American Science & Engineering, Inc. (ASE) develops, manufactures, markets and sells X-ray inspection and other inspection solutions for homeland security and other targeted markets. The company provides maintenance, warranty, research, engineering and training services related to these solutions. The firm's X-ray imaging products utilize several technologies, including traditional transmission X-ray technology, the proprietary Z Backscatter technology, Shaped Energy technology and Radioactive Threat Detection (RTD). The Z Backscatter technology creates photo-quality X-ray images that highlight organic threats and contraband such as explosives, plastic weapons and drugs. The Shaped Energy technology allows high X-ray penetration with reduced need for shielding and radiation exclusion zones. The RTD technology detects radioactive materials in vehicles. ASE technologies are incorporated into systems such as the Shaped Energy Gantry, CargoSearch, ParcelSearch, OmniView Gantry, Z Portal, Gemini and SmartCheck. The Z Backscatter Van (ZBV) is a screening system built into a commercially available delivery van, which allows operators to conduct X-ray imaging of suspect vehicles and objects while the ZBV drives past. The high-energy systems division of ASE designs and manufactures low- to high-power electron beam and X-ray systems and subcomponents. ASE sells its products in the U.S. and throughout the world to a variety of customers, including authorities for port and border security; aviation security agencies; military organizations; and high threat commercial and government facilities. Customers use ASE's products to help combat terrorism, trade fraud, drug trafficking, weapons smuggling and illegal immigrations; and for military force protection and general facility security. In August 2008, the company received SAFETY (Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technology) Act Certification from the U.S. Department of Homeland Security on a variety of its X-ray inspection products.

Employees are offered medical, dental, disability and life insurance; a 401(k) plan; a stock matching program; and a flexible spending program.

BAA plc, a subsidiary of the Spanish construction company Grupo Ferrovial SA (Ferrovial), is a leading airport operator. The firm provides all security services at its airports and offers commercial accommodation, including warehouses, hotels, hangars and check-in desks. The company serves 900 airport retail organizations; and has a 460-member fire team serving all its airports. It owns Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports in London; Edinburgh, Glasgow and Aberdeen airports, in Scotland; and a regional airport in Southampton. Besides these seven airports, the firm also operates Heathrow Express, a non-stop rail service connecting Paddington Station in London to Heathrow Airport, which serves approximately 5 million passengers annually. Internationally, BAA provides management services for three U.S. airports in Boston, Baltimore, Indianapolis and Pittsburgh. The company also has a 65% stake in the Naples Airport, which also serves around 5 million passengers a year. BAA Lynton is the firm's real estate property manager, which acquires, develops and invests in areas surrounding the firm's airports. It mainly manages the Airport Property Partnership, a joint venture with Morley Fund Management. In March 2008, after 15 years of planning and construction, Heathrow Terminal 5 opened to the public. In May 2008, the company sold its World Duty Free (WDF), tax and duty-free business, to the Italian Company, Autogrill S.p.A. WDF formed a 12-year concession agreement for the operation of its existing stores in BAA's U.K. airports. BAA is under UK government orders to sell Gatwick and Stansted, as regulators are forcing a breakup of what they see as a monopoly. BAA suffered a passenger decline of 2.7% in 2008, to 151.4 million.

Employees are offered healthcare coverage; an employee assistance program; and travel discounts.

Bangkok Airways Co., Ltd. is a regional airline operating out of Thailand. Bangkok Airways has a fleet of 20 aircraft serving eight domestic and 13 international destinations. The company's fleet consists of eight 70-seat ATR 72 turbo-prop aircraft, four 144-seat Airbus 319s, three 162-seat Airbus 320s and two 125-seat Boeing 717s. Some of its destinations include Japan, China, Malaysia, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, as well as nearly all the major resort locations in Thailand. Besides flight operations, the firm owns and operates three airports, Samui Airport, Sukhothai Airport and Trat Airport, which serve as regional hubs for the airlines. All three airports feature open-air terminals, reflecting both the aesthetic of the surrounding environment and the architecture of the local Thai culture. Built in 1982, Samui Airport was designed to blend in to the natural flora of the beach resort at Koh Samui, including featuring an open-air Thai restaurant. Other amenities include a spa featuring Thai massage and a souvenir shop. It also houses a customs and immigration facility and a post office. As a hub, Samui mainly serves northern Thailand. Sukhothai Airport, which opened in 1996, is located in Sukhothai, the ancient capital of Siam, and its terminals are built in the style of Siamese pagodas. Bangkok Airways grows organic rice in the paddies surrounding the airport, which it serves during in-flight meals. This airport serves as the airline's domestic hub for international flights in the Mekong River area. The newest airport, Trat, opened in 2003, and serves as a hub for eastern Thailand, including the Koh Chang island resort and other islands. Bangkok Airways plans to expand Trat's service area to include Phuket and other resort locations.

In 2008, the airline flew over 33 million passengers, as well as carried 777,000 tons of cargo. British Airways currently boasts a fleet of 245 aircraft, which is one of the largest in Europe, made up of 57 Boeing 747s, 42 Boeing 777s, 21 Boeing 767s, 13 Boeing 757s, 69 Airbus A319/320/321s, 33 Boeing 737s and 10 smaller aircraft used in the company's regional business. The airline's products include FIRST, Club World, Club Europe, World Traveler Plus, World Traveler, BA Connect, Euro Traveler and UK Domestic. In addition, the firm owns 25% of Australia's Qantas Airways, 13% of Spain's Iberia and 11% of Comair. Along with American Airlines, British Airways formed the OneWorld alliance, which comprises 10 airlines including British Airways, American Airlines, Japan Airlines, Malev, Royal Jordanian, Iberia, Qantas, LAN, Finnair and Cathay Pacific Airways. In June 2008, British Airways' new subsidiary airline, OpenSkies, launched its first flight between Paris and JFK in New York. OpenSkies was created to take advantage of the aviation agreement which enables airlines to fly between any destination in the EU and the U.S. The new carrier offers daily service between Paris and JFK on flights that carry 82 passengers. Each seat has personal entertainment units, and each customer receives personalized concierge service. In July 2008, British Airways acquired French airline L'Avion, which will operate as a subsidiary, for $106 million. In July 2008, the firm announced its intention to acquire Iberia Airlines, which is Spain's largest airline. If completed, the merger would create Europe's third-largest airline.

The company offers its employees reduced airfares and other travel discounts.

British Midland Airways, Ltd. (BMI) is one of the U.K.'s largest airlines. The company has a fleet of 51 jet aircraft with an average age of five years and operates about 1,700 flights a week, serving 36 destinations in 15 countries. The firm is responsible for 12% of all take-offs and landing at London Heathrow Airport. Annual carriage exceeds 7.5 million passengers on scheduled service and charter flights. Together with existing service from Manchester to Chicago and Washington, D.C., BMI is now a major carrier for trans-Atlantic routes originating in U.K. regional markets. BMI also runs routes from London Heathrow to Riyadh, Dammam and Jeddah, Saudi Arabia. The airline boasts many in-flight luxuries, such as seat-back monitors and video games. In addition, BMI is the first airline to use the Tempus 2000 integrated telemedicine service. This allows flight crews to obtain clinically accurate information about an ill passenger, which is electronically transmitted to physicians on the ground for advice on how to respond to a situation. Subsidiary BMI baby offers low-fare services to about 24 destinations in France, the Czech Republic, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Ireland and the U.K. from its Nottingham East Midlands hub. BMI is a Star Alliance member, a group of 20 international airlines offering a worldwide network or travel to 965 destinations in 162 countries. The firm has an expanded agreement with United Airlines, offering five American destinations from Heathrow Airport: Chicago, Los Angeles, Washington D.C., San Francisco and Denver. In January 2009, the company expanded domestic flights between Birmingham and Aberdeen. In March 2009, BMI began offering flights to Kiev and Tel Aviv. In June 2009, Deutsche Lufthansa announced plans to acquire the remainder of BMI in a multi-stage transaction. The firm is 80%-owned by Deutsche Lufthansa and 20%-owned by SAS AB.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Brussels Airlines is a business and leisure airline that serves over fifty European destinations, in addition to destinations in North America, Africa, Asia and the Middle East. The company was formed by SN Airholding, a private holding firm, in recent years from the merger between SN Brussels Airline, the largest full-service airline in Brussels, and Virgin Express, the first of the low cost European airlines. The combined strengths of these two companies allow Brussels to meet the needs of both business and low-cost travelers. Within Europe, the company offers two products: b.flex economy+, which is designed to provide a high level of service while being fast and economical; and b.light economy, which guarantees the airline's lowest fares to over 55 different destinations from Brussels Airport. The firm also offers direct flights to destinations in Africa every week and daily flights to Moscow, Helsinki and Tel Aviv. Flights to other locations and continents are coordinated by Brussels with its four partner airlines: American Airlines, Etihad Airways, Hainan Airlines and Jet Airways. In addition to basic passenger services, Brussels Airlines also markets cargo shipping services in Europe and Africa and charter plane services. The company serves its customers with its 14 Avro RJ85, 12 Avro RJ100, six Bae, three Airbus A319, four Airbus 330-300 and 11 Boeing 737-300 and 737-400 aircrafts, through which it is able to fly both long- and medium-haul. In August 2008, Deutsche Lufthansa agreed to acquire approximately 45% of Brussels Airlines. In October 2008, the company, through a partnership with bmi, added Edinburgh, Leeds Bradford and East Midlands to its passenger offerings. In December 2008, the firm began offering flights to Palermo, Sicily. In March 2009, the firm launched a new travel option, b.business, which is aimed at business travelers on European flights.

Central Japan Railway Company, also known as JR Central or JR Tokai, operates primarily in Tokaido Shinkansen, the main transportation artery linking Japan's principal metropolitan areas of Tokyo, Nagoya and Osaka. The company also operates a network centered in the Nagoya and Shizuoka areas. JR Central has 403 stations and operates 12 conventional lines that form an integrated network with the Tokaido Shinkansen station, which has a line running to Tokyo using new trains with a top speed of 168 mph. Although transportation is the main revenue source for JR Central, the firm is also involved in retail operations and real estate, among other sectors. The company has over 30 subsidiaries, all based in Japan, including JR Tokai Tours; JR Tokai Real Estate Co.; JR Tokai Restaurants Co.; and JR Tokai Hotels Co. Crested Butte, which is near the larger town of Crested Butte, Colorado, and is nestled within the Gunnison National Forest in the Elk Mountain Range. In addition to lodging and five restaurants, the 282-acre resort features 121 trails, a super-pipe, a terrain park, a kids' terrain park, a tubing hill, a snowshoe loop and 15 lifts, including three high-speed quad chairs. CBMR operates its lifts in the summer to serve hikers and mountain bikers, and hosts the Wildflower Rush mountain bike race. Other programs include Nordic skiing, snowboarding, dog sledding, snowmobiling and snowshoeing. Recently, the company installed a new fixed-grip quad lift to access its premier ski-in/ski-out Prospect real estate development; and it acquired the commercial units and management of the Grand Lodge Hotel in Mt. Crested Butte, Colorado. The property is in the midst of a five-year, multi-million dollar, resort-wide overhaul. Part of this renovation effort culminated with the opening of The Lodge at Mountaineer Square and the Mountaineering Conference Center. The Lodge is a luxury residential property featuring condominium and hotel accommodations; and the 9,000 square foot Conference Center is reconfigurable to meet the needs of diverse events. In December 2008, the real estate investment trust firm CNL Lifestyle Properties, Inc. acquired the assets of three family owned Triple Peaks, LLC ski and mountain properties including the Crested Butte in Colorado; the Okemo in Vermont; and the Mount Sunapee in New Hampshire. In accordance with the terms of the acquisition, CNL Lifestyles Properties will be leasing the properties back to Triple Peaks under a 40 year lease agreement and they will manage the ski, golf, hospitality and conference operations.

CBMR offers its employees skiing privileges at 11 Colorado resorts, affordable housing opportunities, discounts at its food and beverage operations, rental shops and access to a health club.

Delta Air Lines, Inc. is a major air carrier that provides scheduled air transportation domestically and internationally for passengers and freight. From its multiple hubs (in Atlanta, Georgia; Cincinnati, Ohio; Detroit, Michigan; Minneapolis/St. Paul, Minnesota; New York-JFK, New York; Salt Lake City, Utah; Amsterdam, Netherlands; and Tokyo-Narita, Japan), the company serves 378 destinations in 66 countries. Delta is a founding member of the SkyTeam international alliance, a global airline alliance that provides customers with extensive worldwide destinations, flights and services. In 2008, a subsidiary of Delta merged with Northwest Airlines, causing Delta to gain ownership of Northwest and its assets. As a result, the company increased its available destinations and transportation capacity, with a total combined fleet of about 800 aircraft. Including the company's SkyTeam and worldwide codeshare partners, the firm offers flights to 570 worldwide destinations in 111 countries. The firm provides regional carrier options through its Delta Connection and Northwest AirlinK services, as well as through its wholly-owned subsidiaries Comair, Inc.; Compass Airlines, Inc.; and Mesaba Aviation, Inc. These services made up roughly 23% of the company's revenue. In May 2009, Delta announced a Trans-Atlantic joint venture with Air France KLM Group, effectively expanding both companies' footprints in destinations around the world, especially in the U.S. and European Union. In June 2009, the company announced plans to slash its capacity by about 10% due to reduced demand. These plans come in addition to 2,100 job buyouts that occurred in February 2009.

Delta offers its employees medical, dental, vision and life insurance; flexible spending accounts; a 401(k) plan; profit sharing; credit union membership; employee assistance programs; and reduced rate travel benefits.

The firm's Internet-based business model allows it to compete as a high-value, low-cost alternative to larger competitors in these industries. Other e-commerce businesses include easyInternetcafe, a provider of public web access terminals; easyValue.com, a comparison shopping site; easyMusic.com, a music download service; and easyJobs.com, an online employment agency. Currently, easyJet is a publicly-traded company, with 15% ownership remaining with easyGroup. The airliner carried 43 million passengers in 2008, and is built on a fleet of 165 Airbus A319s and 30 Boeing 747s. Headquarters for the company are located in London Luton Airport, and 95% of its flight bookings are made over the Internet, keeping the company's overhead low. easyJet flies 400 routes between 103 airports in 23 countries, including the U.K., France, Spain, Switzerland, the Netherlands, Denmark, Italy, Czech Republic, Greece, Germany and Portugal.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

EasyJet plc is a leading European low-cost airline. Based at Luton Airport outside of London, the company has grown from two routes to Glasgow and Edinburgh, Scotland to over 400 routes serving 100 European airports across the U.K., France, Spain, Switzerland, Italy, the Netherlands, Denmark, Czech Republic, Greece, Germany and Portugal, as well as flights to Marrakech, Morocco. In 2008, the company served more than 44 million customers. Key to the expansion of easyJet was its merger with Go Fly (another low-fare carrier), which made the combined company one of Europe's largest low-cost airlines. EasyJet.com is also affiliated with easyCar.com, easyValue.com, easyHotel.com and easyMoney.com, each part of easyGroup. The current easyJet fleet consists of 165 aircraft, primarily Boeing 737-700 and Airbus A320 jets. The average age of aircraft in easyJet's fleet is 3.5 years. Unlike other low-fare European carriers, easyJet pursues negotiation for landing/take-off slots at major airports that serve major capital cities, seeking to provide inexpensive travel directly through reduced overhead expenses in flight and management operations. In January 2008, easyJet, through its wholly-owned subsidiary easyJet Airline Company Ltd., acquired GB Airways Ltd. for approximately $204.4 million. The acquisition allows easyJet to carry more passengers from Gatwick than any other airline and offer services from Manchester for the first time.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Embraer Brazilian Aviation Company, originally a government-controlled company established to produce aircraft for the Brazilian Air Force, manufactures commercial aircraft. Its commercial customers include the U.S. discount airline JetBlue, US Airways and the HNA Group. The firm's business is divided into four primary categories: commercial jets, defense systems, executive jets and aviation services. The firm's commercial aviation business, accounting for 64.4% of sales, produces the ERJ family of jets, EMB jets, and Embraer jets. The ERJ 145 family is composed of four regionally designed jets, the ERJ 135, ERJ 140, ERJ 145 and ERJ 145 XR. Each jet is built specifically for use in regional networks and seats between 37-50 passengers. The jets themselves offer a 95% systems commonality, intended to reduce parts requirements and reduce training costs. The Embraer jets, include four models, 170, 175, 190 and 195, and are all designed to provide greater mission range than common in regional jets, short ground turnaround time, common crew type rating, high fuel efficiency and enhanced cabin configuration flexibility. The firm's EMB jet is a pressurized twin wing-mounted turboprop aircraft that accommodates up to 30 passengers. The company's defense business, which accounts for 6.6% of sales, primarily manufactures transport, training, light attack and surveillance aircraft, which it sells to the Brazilian Air Force and the military forces of 16 other countries. The executive jet segment, which generates 16% of sales, supplies executive jets to companies, including fractional ownership companies, charter companies, air-taxi companies and high net-worth individuals. Lastly, the aviation services segment provides after-sales customer support services and manufactures spare parts for the company's fleets. Support services include field support, technical support and training. In 2008, the firm announced plans to build two new plants in Portugal. Also in 2008, the company opened a new office in Connecticut.

Euro Disney S.C.A. operates Disneyland Resort Paris, a top European vacation destination, through subsidiary Euro Disney Associes S.C.A. (EDA). EDA is 82%-owned by Euro Disney and 18%-owned by two subsidiaries of The Walt Disney Company. Located east of Paris, Disneyland Resort Paris comprises Disneyland Park, Walt Disney Studios Park, seven themed hotels (with a total of 5,800 rooms), two convention centers (including one of France's largest conference centers), Golf Disneyland and Disney Village, a 322,900-square-foot dining, shopping and entertainment center. Combined, the resort's two theme parks, Disneyland Park and Walt Disney Studios Park, offer 54 attractions, including Space Mountain Mission 2, the Twilight Zone Tower of Terror, Big Thunder Mountain and the Cars Race Rally. The park received approximately 15.3 million visits in 2008. Of these, France accounted for the most guests (43%), followed by the U.K. (16%), Benelux (Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg) (13%), Spain (12%), Italy (4%), Germany (3%) and the rest of the world (9%). Wholly-owned EDA subsidiary EDL Hotels S.C.A. operates Disney Village as well as five of the Disney themed hotels: Disney's Newport Bay Club, Sequoia Lodge, Hotel Santa Fe, Hotel New York and Hotel Cheyenne. The other two hotels, Disneyland Hotel and the Davy Crockett Ranch, are operated by EDA itself. Located in Hotel New York and Newport Bay Club, the firm's convention centers, totaling almost 183,000 square feet, handle over 1,100 events per year. EDA also has a large stake in Val d'Europe, a 4,800-acre full-scale town near the park featuring a shopping center, international business center, offices, apartments, homes and hotels. Theme parks generated the majority (54%) of 2008 revenues, followed by the hotels and Disney Village (39%), real estate development (3%) and other activities (4%).

The European Aeronautic Defence and Space Co. (EADS) is a leading aerospace and defense company worldwide. It was formed from the combination of several European aerospace companies, including DaimlerChrysler Aerospace (Germany); Aerospatiale Matra (France); and Construcciones Aeronauticas SA (Spain). The company operates through five major divisions: Airbus, which generated 64.5% of 2007 revenue; Military Transport Aircraft (MTA), 2.9%; Eurocopter, 10.7%; Defence & Security (DS), 14%; and EADS Astrium, 9.1%. Airbus captures roughly half of all commercial airliner orders worldwide and manufactures heavy military transport aircraft through subsidiary Airbus Military. Airbus's latest project is the model A380 model, one of the largest commercial jets available, with space for 555 passengers divided between two levels of seating. MTA designs and manufactures light and medium transport aircraft, and some special mission aircraft. More than 700 of these transports have been sold to air forces around the world, including those of Spain, Poland and the U.A.E. Eurocopter supplies helicopters to both the military and civil markets and is a dominant force in both arenas. The company's helicopter models include Colibri, Fenec, Panther, Cougar and Tiger. DS designs and manufactures manned and unmanned reconnaissance aircraft, including training aircraft. The division also provides secure communications and electronic warfare systems, and is home to over 40 guided missile programs for uses including air-to-air, ground-based air defense, naval force protection and warhead systems, provided through 50%-owned MBDA. The division owns 46% of Eurofighter GmbH. Astrium provides contracting in satellite systems and space transportation. It manufactured the International Space Station's Columbus laboratory. The company is also involved in turboprop plane and aircraft seat manufacturing; freighter conversion; and other activities. In December 2008, the company signed a joint venture agreement with National Aviation Company of India Limited for the creation of an Aircraft, Maintenance, Repair and Overhaul Center at Indira Gandhi International Airport in Delhi.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

The Eurotunnel Group manages the infrastructure of the Channel Tunnel between the U.K. and France, the longest undersea tunnel in the world, and also operates truck shuttle and passenger services through the tunnel. The company has been granted a concession by the British and French governments to operate the Channel Tunnel until 2086. Eurotunnel operates a fleet of 25 shuttle trains, 16 for shuttling trucks and nine for passenger cars, which carry vehicles across the tunnel daily. These shuttles and trains are all electric, thus substantially limiting greenhouse gas emissions to a level well below that of the competing maritime companies. The Chunnel, as it is often called, runs from Folkestone to Calais. Annually, it brings across about 1.25 million trucks, 2 million cars and 55,000 coaches on its shuttle service. The firm also earns toll revenue from independent train operators that use the tunnel. Eurotunnel's primary customer, Eurostar, offers direct services between London, Paris and Brussels. The company's wholly-owned subsidiary, Europorte 2, was the first French operator to be granted access to the Chunnel. In 2008, the company averaged nearly 48,000 passengers daily. Its Port Maritime Security International, Ltd. subsidiary provides security services and consulting to port, maritime, rail and logistics operators.

Horizon Air Industries, Inc., a subsidiary of Alaska Air Group, Inc., is one of the largest regional airlines in the Pacific Northwest. The company operates 18 jets and 41 turboprop aircraft serving 47 cities in eight U.S. states (Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, California, Colorado, Arizona and Nevada) and two Canadian provinces (British Columbia and Alberta). Headquartered in Seattle, the company has its primary maintenance base in Portland, with Los Angeles, Boise, Seattle, Pasco and Spokane housing additional maintenance facilities. Horizon and its sister company, Alaska Airlines, Inc. (Alaska), integrate their flight schedules to provide convenient, competitive connections between most points served by their systems. Approximately 23% of the firm's passengers connected to flights operated by Alaska. Horizon and Alaska also have code-sharing agreements with partner companies and reciprocal frequent flyer agreement programs with 15 companies. Some of these partner companies include Northwest Airlines, Continental Airlines, Air France, Qantas, Korean Air and British Airways. During 2008, Horizon carried 7.4 million revenue passengers for 2.6 million passenger revenue miles (PRMs), with an average trip length of 357 miles. Approximately 91% of its PRMs came from domestic flights (primarily in Washington, Oregon, California and Idaho), with an additional 8% from flights to Canada and less than 1% from its two flights to Mexico. Due to increased fuel costs, the firm plans to reduce its capacity by 9% during 2009. All of its flights feature Horizon's special in-flight service, which includes free Starbucks coffee, soda and snacks. It also makes Northwest wines and microbrews available for purchase. The firm added new flights to Loreto and La Paz, Mexico during 2008.

Horizon offers its employees health, vision and dental coverage, as well as travel privileges on Horizon and more than 90 other air carriers.

Hospitality Properties Trust (HPT) is a real estate investment trust. The company owns 289 hotels with 42,881 rooms or suites, as well as 185 travel centers, located in 44 U.S. states, Puerto Rico and Canada. HPT hotel properties are currently operated under the following brands, listed in approximate descending order: Candlewood Suites, Courtyard by Marriott, Residence Inn by Marriott, Staybridge Suites, Hyatt Place, TownePlace Suites by Marriott, Crowne Plaza Hotels & Resorts, Country Inns & Suites by Carlson, InterContinental Hotels & Resorts, Radisson Hotels & Resorts, Marriott Hotels and Resorts, Holiday Inn Hotels & Resorts, SpringHill Suites by Marriott and Park Plaza Hotels & Resorts. The company's 185 travel centers include 145 operated under the TravelCenters of America or TA brand names and 40 operated under the Petro Stopping Centers brand name. All of HPT's management agreements or leases share eight points: first, managers are required to pay a fixed minimum rent; second, operators must pay percentage returns on gross hotel revenues exceeding a certain threshold; third, all agreements are long-term (15 years or more); fourth, each hotel is a part of a combination of hotels and is subject to cross-default obligations with respect to all other hotels in the same combination; fifth, each combination of hotels is geographically diverse; sixth, contract renewals may only be pursued for a combination of hotels, not for each hotel individually; seventh, the firm's agreements require the deposit of 5% to 6% of gross hotel revenues into escrows to fund periodic renovations; finally, each management agreement or lease includes security terms to ensure payments to HPT. Generally, the firm prefers to purchase multiple properties in a single transaction, rather than individual properties. During 2008, HPT sold three hotels for approximately $16 million.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Hotwire Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Expedia, Inc., offers discount prices on airfare, hotel accommodations, rental cars, cruises and vacation packages through its web site, hotwire.com. The company offers discounts to its customers by helping travel suppliers book unsold airline seats, hotel rooms and rental cars. Further savings are enabled by the nature of the online purchasing process. For example, a customer can search for a hotel by price, star rating and neighborhood preferences, but cannot find out the name of the hotel until after purchase (known as an opaque purchase). The company offers airline tickets from more than 30 domestic and international airlines. Hotwire partners with several U.S. carriers, including United, Continental, U.S. Airways, JetBlue, Delta, Frontier and Northwest, as well as reputable international airlines such as British Airways, Emirates, KLM, Lufthansa and Swiss Air Lines. Additionally, the firm partners with a variety of hotels including the Crowne Plaza, the DoubleTree, Embassy Suites and the Hilton; car rental companies such as Budget, Avis, Alamo and Hertz; and technology suppliers such as Sabre, Pegasus Solutions, Sita and Ita Software. The firm also offers discounted cruises with more than 80 ships. Hotwire's web site promises discounts of up to 45% on airline tickets and up to 60% on hotel reservations. The special low prices that the company offers its customers are called Hot-Fares and Hot-Rates. The firm has designed the web site with the goal of a typical sale taking less than five minutes to complete.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Innkeepers USA Trust is a real estate investment trust (REIT) that specializes in the ownership of multi-brand, upscale, extended-stay hotels in the U.S. The firm seeks to acquire hotel properties in markets with high barriers to entry and with strong underlying demand growth. The company's strategy includes using multiple lessees and hotel management companies to operate and manage its hotel properties. Innkeepers owns interests in 74 hotels with an aggregate of 10,100 rooms/suites through its partnership interests in Innkeepers USA Ltd. Partnership (the Partnership), and an interest in one hotel with 355 rooms in an unconsolidated entity. A number of these hotels operate under the Residence Inn by Marriott brand, and the remainder are leased to the firm's management subsidiary, Innkeepers Hospitality, Inc. In addition to its acquisitions of existing hotels in the upscale and extended-stay market, Innkeepers also acquires under-performing mid-priced and full service hotels that have the potential for strategic repositioning or re-flagging to a premium franchise brand in the upscale segment. Hotels in deteriorated physical condition that could benefit from renovation and/or hotels in attractive locations are acquired and repackaged under a major brand. In recent years, the firm was acquired by Grand Prix Holdings LL, an affiliate of Apollo Investment Corp. (AIC), for $1.5 billion.

International Leisure Hosts, Ltd. owns and operates a lodge, cabin, RV park and campground concession called the Flagg Ranch Resort. Located on the federally owned John D. Rockefeller Memorial Parkway in northwestern Wyoming, Flagg Ranch occupies a scenic site along the Snake River four miles north of Grand Teton National Park and two miles south of Yellowstone National Park. It provides water, electrical and sewer connections for RVs, as well as campsites without hookups and one- or two-bed cabins. Campsites feature fire pits and picnic tables, while cabins have full baths, telephones, coffee makers and private patios. A central lodge serves guests and visitors with a restaurant, pub, espresso bar, lounge and gift shop, as well as a grocery store, gas station and shower and laundry facilities. Additionally, Flagg Ranch organizes group tours and outdoor activities, such as rafting trips, horseback riding, tours of Yellowstone and Grand Teton National Parks and guided fly-fishing excursions. Although the majority of the company's revenue comes during the summer months, during the winter season, Flagg Ranch runs various snowmobile concessions, including guided snowmobile access to Yellowstone and its famous landmarks, such as Old Faithful, through a National Park Service license. One-day guided snowmobile tours include breakfast, lunch and snowmobile-compatible winter clothing (boots, gloves, snow suit and helmet), as well as gas and oil, while multi-day tours also include lodging. Due to legal restrictions imposed by the National Park Service and others, only limited numbers of snowmobile tours are allowed to enter Yellowstone and lodging is currently unavailable during the winter.

Company employees can stay at dormitories on the property, housing 2-3 per room, or they can stay in the RV park if they have an RV. Employee laundry facilities are free, and there is an employee rec room with table games, TV/VCR and Internet access.

Joie de Vivre Hospitality (JdV) operates primarily through subsidiary Joie de Vivre Hotels, one of California's largest independent boutique hotel operators. It operates businesses throughout California, including 37 boutique hotels featuring a combined 20 restaurants and bars and nearly 4,000 rooms. JdV's boutique hotels target a niche audience by embodying a particular lifestyle or theme, such as arts and literature, featured at the Hotel Rex; rock and roll, at the Phoenix Hotel; or Japanese pop-culture, at Hotel Tomo. JdV owns and operates 32 hotels, with two more in development; directly manages two condominiums; and manages five hotels through a subsidiary. It also owns and operates the Kabuki Springs & Spa in San Francisco; Spa Vitale at Hotel Vitale; Spa Elia, a day spa at the Hotel Los Gatos in Silicon Valley; and Allegria Spa, located in the Ventana Inn & Spa near Big Sur. JdV's restaurants and bars are usually attached to its hotels, such as Bambuddha Lounge in the Phoenix Hotel and Cafe Andree in Hotel Rex; however, it also has free-standing restaurants such as Millennium Restaurant in Union Square, San Francisco. The firm's properties also offer approximately 41,000 combined square feet of meeting space, catering primarily to California-based corporate clients. The company's web site features the Yvette the Hotel Matchmaker service, which matches guests to a particular hotel based on personality. In addition to managing its hotels, spas and restaurants, JdV provides hospitality consulting services, including feasibility studies for hotels, resorts and spas; concept development and creative brainstorming for new projects, including due diligence for purchases; review and customer service training; corporate culture review and work climate action plans; and strategic planning. In November 2008, the company opened the Citizen Hotel, a luxury boutique hotel in Sacramento. In February 2009, the firm acquired the 23-room Gauge House in Sonoma County.

Keio Corporation provides rail and bus services in metropolitan Tokyo. It leads the Keio Group, which brings together 43 companies divided into transportation, merchandise sales, real estate, leisure services, construction and other groups. The non-transportation operations originated from efforts to develop land along its service routes, most notably along the Keio Line, which extends from Shinjuku to Tokyo's southwestern suburbs of Keio-hachioji. The transportation group, which accounts for 27.8% of revenues, operates 52.6 miles of train networks with 69 stations, carrying about 1.69 million passengers every day. The main lines are the Keio Line and the Inokashira Line, which, along with four smaller lines, service Tokyo and the northern Kanagawa Prefecture. Rail services include reserved women-only cars on express trains with morning, late afternoon and late evening schedules. The transportation segment also operates certain bus services. The merchandise segment, which generates 40% of revenues, is dominated by department stores, but also includes retail stores, book sellers and others. The real estate division, accounting for 5% of revenue, has sale and leasing operations. The leisure group, which generates 15.5% of revenues, is composed of travel services, hotels, restaurants and advertising services. The firm's remaining businesses, collectively accounting for 11.7% of revenue, include building maintenance, accounting services, railcar maintenance and construction.

Together, these properties feature a 779,000 square foot casino floor with 1,070 table games and 3,240 slot machines; almost 3,190 hotel suites; 1.2 million square feet of meeting, exhibition and convention space; 1 million sq. ft. of retail and dining space; and the 15,000 seat Venetian Arena. The company's two largest development projects are the $4.9 billion Marina Bay Sands resort in Singapore and the $12 billion Cotai Strip, a collection of hotel properties, casinos and entertainment venues in Macao, China. In August 2008, the firm opened The Four Seasons Macao next to The Venetian Macao. It features 360 hotel rooms; a 70,000 square foot casino floor with 120 table games and 200 slot machines; and 211,000 square feet of retail space. In November 2008, due to current economic conditions, LVSC postponed some of its international development projects. The company recently announced it plans to open Sands Casino Resort Bethlehem, featuring 3,000 slot machines and various entertainment options, in May 2009.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

LaSalle Hotel Properties is a multi-tenant, multi-operator real estate investment trust (REIT) that owns and invests in luxury hotels. The firm primarily works with hotels located in convention, resort or major urban business markets. The company currently owns interests in 31 upscale and luxury full-service hotels with approximately 8,500 guestrooms located in 11 states and Washington, D.C. The firm is comprised of hotel investors, asset managers and financial experts rather than hotel operators. LaSalle's hotels are operated and managed by unrelated hotel operating companies. LaSalle maintains strategic relationships with internationally recognized hotel operating companies such as Hyatt Hotels & Resorts; Westin Hotels & Resorts; Sheraton Hotels & Resorts; Davidson Hotel Company; Gemstone; and others. The firm seeks to improve revenue growth through renovations, redevelopment and/or expansions; brand or franchise conversion; acquisitions of appropriate full-service hotels in the U.S. and abroad; and selective development of hotel properties in favorable upscale markets. Properties include the Marriott Seaview Resort, a luxury golf and conference resort located north of Atlantic City, NJ; the Westin Copley Place, a four diamond hotel located in the Back Bay area of Boston; and the San Diego Paradise Point Resort, which lies on 44 acres of land and features nearly a mile of beachfront. The company maintains a 95% controlling interest in joint venture, Modern Magic Hotel LLC. In April 2008, the company announced an additional joint venture agreement with LaSalle Investment Management to seek domestic hotel investments in high barrier-to-entry urban and resort markets in the U.S. LaSalle will own 15% of the joint venture.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Learjet, Inc., a subsidiary in the Aerospace division of Bombardier, Inc., is one of the top manufacturers of high-performance business jets. A pioneer in the industry, the firm has built over 2,000 aircraft since producing its first jet in 1964. It produces three models: the Learjet 40 XR premium light jet, the Learjet 45 XR super-light jet and the 60 XR mid-size jet. The 40 XR can hold up to seven passengers. With a full tank of gas, it can fly a maximum of 1,980 miles (using the standard average of four passengers and two crew), meaning it can easily fly from Chicago to Cancun without refueling. The 45 XR holds up to nine people and is one of the only jets in its weight class to be certified by both the U.S. FAA and the European Aviation Safety Agency. It has an even longer range than the 40 XR (2,266 miles), and can easily carry eight passengers from Aspen, Colorado to New York City on one tank of gas. Like the 45 XR, the 60 XR holds up to nine passengers but has a slightly longer range (2,770 miles). Its amenities include stand-up room and a day bed for longer trips, and it is equipped with DVD/VCR video systems. All these Learjet models have a maximum cruising speed of Mach 0.81 (535 mph) and are certified to fly at up to 51,000 feet, higher than most aircraft, which often allows them to avoid air traffic as well as turbulent weather. The firm's newest plane is the Learjet 85, which has its own web site, Learjet85.com, featuring technical specifications and images. It is faster than other Learjet models, with a top speed of Mach 0.82 or 624 mph, and has a longer range at 3,452 miles, meaning it can fly from Los Angeles to Barrow, Alaska.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Mesa Air Group, Inc. is a holding company whose principal subsidiaries operate as regional air carriers providing scheduled passenger and airfreight service. As of September 2008, the company served 124 cities in 38 states, Washington D.C., Canada and Mexico and operated a fleet of 159 aircraft with approximately 800 daily departures. Mesa conducts its airline operations through subsidiaries Mesa Airlines and Freedom Airlines. Approximately 96% of the firm's 2008 passenger revenue was derived from operations associated with code-share agreements its subsidiaries maintain with Delta Airlines, United Airlines and America West Airlines (d.b.a. US Airways). Mesa's remaining passenger revenue from continuing operations is derived from its independent go! operations in Hawaii. In addition to carrying passengers, the firm carries freight and express packages on its passenger flights and has interline small cargo freight agreements with many other carriers. It also has contracts with the U.S. Postal Service for carriage of mail to the cities it serves and occasionally operates charter flights when its aircraft are not otherwise used for scheduled service. Other subsidiaries include MPD, Inc. (d.b.a. Mesa Pilot Development), which operates student pilot training programs; Regional Aircraft Services, Inc., which performs repair and overhaul services; MAGI Insurance, Ltd.; Ritz Hotel Management Corp.; Nilchii, Inc.; Mesa In-Flight, Inc.; and Regional Aviation Advisors, Inc., which provides aircraft financing advisory services. Mesa also partially owns a Chinese regional carrier, Kunpeng. In May 2008, Mesa dissolved subsidiary Air Midwest, partially due to high fuel costs and low demand. In July 2008, go! announced that it will begin implementing a first-checked-bag service charge to offset the increases in fuel costs.

Mesa Air Group offers its employees attendance incentives; flight benefits; flexible spending accounts; and medical, dental, vision, life and disability insurance.

The firm also owns and operates three championship golf courses: Shadow Creek, in North Las Vegas; Fallen Oak, in Saucier, Mississippi; and Primm Valley Golf Club, in Primm, Nevada, near the California boarder. Almost two-thirds of MGM's revenue is generated by non-gaming activities. In December 2008, the company agreed to sell Treasure Island hotel and casino in Las Vegas to Ruffin Acquisition, LLC for roughly $775 million. The firm has a joint venture agreement with Dubai World, splitting the ownership of the $8 billion Project CityCenter, still under development, located between Bellagio and Monte Carlo. With completion planned by the end of 2009, it will feature a 4,000-room casino resort, two 400-room non-casino hotels, and 425,000 square feet of retail, restaurant and entertainment space; as well as luxury condominiums. As of early 2009, the company had entered into hotel management arrangements with various international developers and was considering several other development opportunities that could put MGM-branded facilities in locations throughout the Middle East and Asia. Specific plans include MGM Grand and Bellagio properties currently under development in China, Vietnam and Egypt.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Midwest Air Group, Inc. is the holding company for Midwest Airlines, a premium-service, one-class airline operating from hubs in Kansas City, Milwaukee and Omaha with flights to 23 U.S. cities. Business and upscale leisure travelers enjoy in-flight amenities including leather seats, fresh cookies baked on-board and superior meals served on china. Midwest Airlines also operates, through subsidiary Skyway Airlines, Inc. (formerly Astral Aviation), a short-haul commuter airline named Midwest Connect. With service to 27 cities in the upper Midwest and Toronto, Canada, Midwest Connect provides convenient regional connections to Midwest Airlines flights and point-to-point service between select cities. Midwest Airlines and Midwest Connect constitute the companies operating segments. The company currently has three principal product offerings: Midwest Airlines Signature Service (MASiS), Midwest Airlines Saver Service (MASaS) and Midwest Connect (MC) regional service. MASiS, which is Midwest Airlines' traditional product, is a single-class, premium service passenger jet airline. MASiS features 2-by-2 seating throughout the cabin of the carrier's Boeing 717 fleet. The company offers its MASaS in high-volume, leisure-oriented markets. MASaS features a more traditional 2-by-3 coach seating arrangement, but with more legroom. MC builds feeder traffic and provides regional scheduled passenger service to cities primarily in the Midwest. In January 2008, the firm was acquired by private equity firm TPG Capital for $450 million. Northwest Airlines is a passive partner in the deal, and now has an enhanced codeshare agreement with Midwest. In March 2009, following the acquisition of Northwest by Delta Airlines, the firm announced an agreement with Delta for joint frequent flyer programs, marketing and access to airport lounges.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

National Aviation Company of India Limited (NACIL) was formed when the Indian government merged its two former air carriers, Air India (AI), currently serving international routes, and Indian Airlines, serving domestic routes. Although the new company uses the Air India brand for both international and domestic flights, its new logo and airplane paint design blends those of the two old companies. The company inherited flights from Mumbai and 12 other Indian cities, as well as 28 international destinations from AI. Additionally, although Indian Airlines was mainly a domestic carrier, serving 58 destinations in India, NACIL also inherited from it 18 international destinations. Currently, NACIL's network extends to the U.K., to which it offers one flight; Europe, two; Asia Pacific, eight; the Gulf and Middle East, seven; the U.S. and Canada, four; and Africa, one. Additionally, the firm has increased its market access through code-sharing arrangements in Europe, North America, Asia Pacific and the Middle East. Recently launched subsidiary Air India Express is a low fare airline with 21 Boeing 737-800s in its fleet, including seven leased aircraft, operating flights from 16 Indian cities to 14 international destinations, mostly in the Middle East. NACIL inherited 115 aircraft from the two previous airlines: 39 from AI, mainly consisting of Airbus A310s and various Boeing 747 and 777 models; and the remainder from Indian Airlines, mainly consisting of Airbus A320s and Boeing 737s, as well as other models. NACIL has 68 new aircraft on order, 50 for AI and 18 for Air India Express, to be delivered by 2012. After receiving some of these aircraft, the firm's fleet now numbers 148. Subsidiary Hotel Corporation of India Ltd. owns two flight kitchens at Mumbai and Delhi; the 376-room five-star Centaur hotel in Delhi; and the 252-room Centaur hotel on the banks of Dal Lake in Srinagar, Kashmir.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

NAV Canada owns and operates Canada's civil air navigation service (ANS), directing the air traffic throughout Canada and oceanic airspace assigned to the country under international agreements. The company, a non-share capital, private firm, was created by the nation's airlines, air controllers and business jet operators. The firm collects fees from airlines and other aircraft owners for its services, which include air traffic control, flight information, weather briefings, aeronautical information, airport advisory services and electronic aids to navigation. This is accomplished through its infrastructure of seven control centers, 41 control towers, 60 flight service stations, eight flight information centers and stations providing weather information in northern Canada. These facilities are supported by a network of over 1,000 ground-based aids to navigation, including 45 radar sites across Canada. The firm also has 38 maintenance centers. In the place of shareholders, the company is managed by four members: the government of Canada; the Air Transport Association of Canada (representing air carriers); the Canadian Business Aviation Association (representing business and general aviation); and the NAV Canada Bargaining Agents Association (representing employees).

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

The Oberoi Group, operating as EIH, Ltd., owns or manages 27 Oberoi and Trident brand luxury hotels and three small cruiser ships in five countries. Additionally, the group operates airport restaurants, travel and tour services, in-flight catering, car rentals, project management and corporate air charters. The firm has locations across the Asia-Pacific region: 11 hotels in India; two hotels in Indonesia; two hotels and two Nile river boats in Egypt; one hotel in Mauritius; and one hotel in Saudi Arabia. The company also operates two heritage hotels, the Maidens Hotel and the Clarke's Hotel, which are located in historic colonial areas. The firm offers a member program called Connections, which rewards points for staying at the hotels. These points can be redeemed for a variety of things, including additional stay at the Group's hotels. Many of the hotels feature spas, which can also be used by non-guests. Additionally, the firm operates its own travel agency through subsidiary Mercury Travels. Mercury has 15 offices in India and marketing locations in New York and Frankfurt. Although Mercury primarily works to book corporate travel and leisure travelers staying at an Oberoi location, it does offer limited services for other travelers. The Aviation segment of the group offers two aircraft for charter: a Hawker 850 XP and a King Air C-90A. The planes can be booked with as little as 72 hours notice and fly between locations within India along with a limited international service. The flagship Oberoi hotel and the adjoining Trident in Mumbai were attacked by terrorists in November 2008, with significant damage and some lives lost. The Trident was reopened in late 2008, with the Oberoi Mumbai scheduled to reopen in 2009.

Oberoi Group maintains The Oberoi Centre of Learning and Development (OCLD), which offers a specialized two year course in hospitality management.

Priceline.com, Inc. is a leading online travel company that offers its customers a broad range of travel services, including airline tickets, hotel rooms, car rentals, vacation packages, cruises and destination services. Within the U.S., the firm offers customers a unique choice: the ability to purchase travel services in a traditional, price-disclosed manner or the opportunity to use the Name Your Own Price service, which allows customers to make offers on travel goods and services at discounted prices. To make an offer, a customer specifies the origin and destination of the trip, the dates on which the customer wishes to depart and return, the price the customer is willing to pay and the customer's valid credit card to guarantee the offer. In total, there are 13 domestic airlines and 26 international airlines participating in its Name Your Own Price airline ticket service. The company enables customers to make hotel reservations on a worldwide basis primarily under the Booking.com and Agoda brands internationally and primarily under the priceline.com brand in the U.S. Through these operations, Priceline works with more than 60,000 chain-owned and independently owned hotels offering hotel reservations on various web sites and in multiple languages. The international business, which currently is primarily generated by its European operations, represented approximately 55% of the company's gross bookings in 2007. This segment contributed more than two-thirds of Priceline's consolidated operating income during that period. Additionally, the firm offers financial services through Priceline Mortgage Company LLC, PricelineMortgage.com. PricelineMortgage.com is controlled by EverBank, a federally chartered savings association. EverBank Financial Corp. provides management services to pricelinemortgage.com, including the procurement of personnel and office space and assistance in obtaining regulatory approvals. PricelineMortgage.com operates in all 50 U.S. states.

Employees are offered medical and dental coverage; a bonus program; a 401(k) plan; and travel agent discount benefits.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Rent-A-Wreck of America (RAWA) is a leading provider of vehicle rental services, with operations in approximately 400 locations in the U.S. and internationally in Scandinavia and Iceland. Through its Rent-A-Wreck and Priceless Rent-A-Car brands, the company rents used-vehicles. RAWA offers its Rent-A-Wreck franchises to qualified franchisees, who may either rent or lease vehicles. All of the company's franchisees offer various vehicles to their customers depending on local demand, which provides them with the flexibility to offer an appropriate range of vehicles for their areas. These vehicles can range anywhere from budgets cars to pickup trucks, vans, station wagons or luxury cars. The firm's marketing strategies have relied heavily on the use of its strange name, but the firm has also involved a few slogans, such as Don't Let the Name Fool You! and The Smart Alternative. The company also offers the option of adding a franchise service to existing businesses. Recently, RAWA completed a merger with MBFG, Inc., a subsidiary of J.J.F. Management Services, Inc. J.J.F., headquartered in Maryland, operates 24 automobile and truck rental and dealership franchises across the country, totaling about 2,500 vehicles. The company recently partnered with LeasePlan USA for emergency roadside service for its rental vehicles. In October 2008, the company opened new branches in Fontana, California and Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Riviera Holdings Corp., through wholly-owned subsidiary Riviera Operating Corporation (ROC), owns and operates the Riviera Hotel and Casino, located on Las Vegas Boulevard (The Strip) in Las Vegas. The Riviera opened in 1955 and has a reputation for delivering high-quality, traditional Las Vegas-style gaming, entertainment and other amenities. The casino has approximately 100,000 square feet of gaming space with approximately 900 slot machines and 35 gaming tables, including blackjack, craps, roulette and poker; the hotel has 2,075 guest rooms in five towers. It has 160,000 square feet of convention, meeting and banquet space. The Riviera offers live entertainment shows, such as An Evening at La Cage, a female impersonation show, and Crazy Girls, an adult revue. The company continues to explore the possibility of development of an approximately 60,000-square-foot entertainment complex to be constructed directly over the casino, which could contain specialty themed entertainment that would appeal to the main target audience, adults age 45-65. It is also exploring several options for the development of its existing 26-acre site, including a joint venture for the development of a condominium, time-share or an additional hotel tower and parking garage. Subsidiary Riviera Black Hawk, Inc. owns and operates the Riviera Black Hawk Casino, a limited-stakes casino, in Black Hawk, Colorado. The Black Hawk, located about 40 miles west of Denver, is one of the largest full-service casinos in Colorado, with approximately 800 slot machines and six live game tables. The firm offers the Black Hawk Player's Club, rewarding frequent players and collecting data about Club members which the company uses to customize promotions to attract repeat visitors. The company's web site allows travelers to book rooms, buy souvenirs, check Player's Club point balances and make other reservations before a trip. In June 2009, the company delisted from the New York Stock Exchange; its shares continue to be traded over-the-counter.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Rosewood Hotels & Resorts, LLC operates ultra-luxury boutique hotels and resorts worldwide. It has 10 hotels and eight resorts, with over 2,000 rooms, villas and suites, in the U.S., Canada, Mexico, the Caribbean, Saudi Arabia and Japan. It also has various locations under construction, including Rosewood Dubai, in the U.A.E. (scheduled to open by 2010), Rosewood San Miguel de Allende in Mexico (2010) and Rosewood Costa Carmel in Costa Rica (2012). Besides constructing its own facilities, Rosewood has acquired existing properties and management contracts, including the Rosewood Inn of the Anasazi in Santa Fe, New Mexico and the San Ysidro Ranch, A Rosewood Resort, located in Santa Barbara, California. Its facilities are generally small, featuring less than 200 accommodations ranging from 350-square-foot rooms to 3,200-square-foot suites. The company uses architecture and decor to attempt to capture the unique history, geography and culture of each hotel or resort location. Services offered at Rosewood facilities can include tennis courts, a courtesy car with 5-mile radius, unpack and packing services, babysitting services, twice-daily housekeeping with nightly turndown service, pools and fitness centers, as well as shops and various dining facilities. Some locations also offer business centers stocked with computers, printers, faxes and copiers. Eight locations also offer spa services, such as exercise training and facilities, facials, aromabaths, hydrotherapy, massages, manicures and pedicures. In addition, three hotels and resorts also feature private residences, which offer owners the same services and amenities as resort guests. The private residences often come fully furnished and feature floor plan inclusions such as full kitchens, fireplaces, private pools and terraces. In January 2008, the company rebranded five of its spas with the name Sense, A Rosewood Spa. Six more Sense spas are scheduled to open between 2009 and 2012.

Royal Caribbean Cruises, Ltd. is a global cruise vacation firm serving the contemporary, premium and deluxe cruise markets, including the budget and luxury segments. With 38 ships offering around 78,650 berths, the firm operates five brand names: Royal Caribbean International, Celebrity Cruises, Pullmantur, Azamara Cruises and CDF Croisieres de France. It also has a 50% joint venture investment in TUI Cruises with TUI AG. Royal Caribbean's ships have itineraries that call on approximately 425 destinations worldwide, including Alaska, Australia/New Zealand, the Bahamas, Canada/New England, the Caribbean, Europe, Asia, Hawaii, Mexico, the U.S. Pacific Northwest, the Panama Canal and South America. These ships offer a wide range of activities, services and amenities, including swimming pools, sun decks, salons, gyms, spas, ice skating rinks, rock climbing walls, casinos, lounges, bars, on-board entertainment, retail shopping and movie theaters. Pullmantur, which has substantial operations in Mexico, was negatively impacted by the H1N1 or swine flu outbreak early in 2009, including being forced to postpone the launch of its new ship, Pacific Dream. The Celebrity Cruises brand targets the higher-end segment of the industry with superior service and facilities and cruises to unusual destinations such as the Arctic, Antarctic and the Galapagos. Azamara Cruises consists of two smaller ships, of about 700 passengers each, that focus on cruises to unique destinations, with an emphasis on on-board lectures and fine dining. Subsidiary Royal Celebrity Tours operates land-tour vacations in several locations, including Alaska, using the world's largest glass-domed train cars; Canada, alongside Rocky Mountaineer Railtours; and Europe. Royal Caribbean will launch a new ship, Oasis of the Seas, one of the world's largest cruise ships, in December 2009. Her sister ship, Allure of the Seas, will follow in 2010.

The firm offers special rates for employees, their families and relatives. For sea-based employees, Royal Caribbean operates on a 14-weeks-on, 14-weeks-off plan.

Ryanair Holdings PLC operates a low fares scheduled passenger airline serving short-haul, point-to-point routes in Europe and Morocco. The firm flies from bases at airports in Dublin, London, Glasgow, Brussels, Frankfurt, Milan, Stockholm, Rome, Barcelona, Nottingham East Midlands, Liverpool, Shannon, Pisa, Cork, Marseille, Madrid, Bremen, Dusseldorf, Bristol, Alicante, Valencia, Belfast, Bournemouth and Birmingham. Booking for its flights is done almost exclusively online through its web site, which also offers online booking of car rental, hotels, hostels, tours and travel services, such as travel insurance, gift vouchers, financial deals and airport transfers. The company owns wholly-owned subsidiaries Ryanair, Ltd.; Darley Investments, Ltd.; Ryanair.com, Ltd.; and Coinside Ltd. Ryanair also holds a 29% stake in Aer Lingus. In February 2009, the firm announced a planned 20% cut in its Dublin-based aircraft, 18% cut in its weekly rotations, 20% drop in its Dublin traffic and job cuts affecting pilots, cabin crew and engineers, to offset increased Dublin Airport Authority charges, among other factors.

Spirit Aerosystems Holdings, Inc. is an independent original parts designer and manufacturer of aerostructures in the world. Aerostructures are structural components such as fuselages, propulsion systems and wing systems for commercial and military aircraft. It operates through three principal segments: fuselages, propulsion systems and wing systems. The fuselages segment produces forward, mid and rear fuselage sections and offers services that include numerical control programming, materials testing, on-site planning and global supply chain management. The propulsion systems segment primarily produces nacelles (aerodynamic engine enclosures which enhance propulsion installation efficiency, dampen engine noise and provide thrust reversing capabilities), struts/pylons (structures that attach engines to airplane wings) and engine structural components. Propulsion system services include engineering design, numerical control programming, materials testing, on-site planning, process improvement consulting and global supply chain management. The wing systems segment produces wings, wing components and flight control components. The firm is also engaged in tooling (the fabrication of custom tools). The firm's tooling capabilities include tool design, CNC programming, machining, composite, aluminum and invar tooling. The company offers spare parts and components for all items of which it is the original production supplier and provides maintenance, repair and overhaul work for nacelles, fuselage doors, structural components and modification kits. The firm primarily supplies its products to Boeing and Airbus. In April 2008, the company joined a joint venture partnership with several aviation companies for a metal bond repair station called Taikoo Spirit AeroSystems Composite Co. in Xiamen, China. In September 2008, the firm opened a new maintenance, repair and overhaul station in Prestwick, Scotland.

Employees are offered medical, dental and vision insurance, as well as a 401(k) plan.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

SuperShuttle International, Inc. offers shared ride, door-to-door ground transportation. It is a subsidiary in the On-Demand Division of Veolia Transportation, Inc., which is itself a subsidiary of Veolia Environnement. SuperShuttle offers customers travel accommodations from a home, hotel or office to the airport, charging, on average, less than a taxi or limo because it essentially car pools customers in a single, distinctly colored blue and yellow van. It attempts to speed up the travel process by grouping together passengers traveling to or from the same area using a proprietary dispatch system. Reservations for transportation can be made online via the firm's web site or by phone through 1-800-BLUE-VAN. Additionally, SuperShuttle has partnered with various online travel sites, such as Expedia, Orbitz and Travelocity, allowing customers to make reservations at the same time they make their other travel plans. The van drivers are effectively small business owners, with their van, which they must operate and maintain by themselves, constituting a franchise. From the company, drivers receive the benefits of the dispatch service and reservation system, as well as financing options and marketing partnerships. Since virtually pioneering the shared ride concept in Los Angeles in 1983, the firm has expanded across the country and now serves over 8 million customers annually. With a fleet of approximately 1,200 vans, the company provides 24-hour service in 50 cities surrounding 32 airports, including New York, Dallas/Ft. Worth, Denver, San Francisco, Miami, Baltimore and Washington, D.C. It also has a presence in Ontario, Canada and plans further service expansions. SuperShuttle offers chartered van services and group and employee ground transportation in all of its cities of operation. Additionally, it offers business class sedan transportation, through subsidiary ExecuCar, in nine cities.

VRG Linhas Aereas S.A. (VRG), formerly Viacao Aerea Rio-Grandense, and still operating under the brand name Varig, is a wholly-owned subsidiary of GOL Linhas Aereas Inteligentes (GOL). VRG's fleet currently includes 20 aircraft, but GOL intends to expand that holding to 34 total Boeing aircraft, consisting of 737s and 767s. The new aircraft will allow the airline to serve more international destinations, such as countries in Europe, North America and South America. Currently, VRG flies to 18 destinations. The parent company also intends to expand service to other routes that are not currently operated. VRG has kept its historic brand name of VARIG, under which its airline service operates. VARIG offers direct flights; two service classes on long-haul flights, business and coach; and a single class of flights in the domestic market, which includes flights between the main economic centers of Brazil, including Congonhas, Gaurulhos, Santos Dumont and Galeao airports. In addition, the company also operates its Smiles program, which is a frequent flier program. Members of the program can use their card to accrue airline miles, as well as points from non-airline affiliates, such as restaurants and hotels. The firm's flights are booked through the parent company's web site, and GOL operates all the company's aircraft.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

West Japan Railway Company (JR-West), serving an area with over 43 million people, runs the railway operations in western Japan. Its network, covering 3,122 miles of track and 1,234 stations, is divided into three categories: urban services (covering 593 miles, including three branch offices), conventional intercity or regional services (covering 2,129 miles) and high-speed services, known as Shinkansen (covering 400 miles). The Shinkansen route lies on one long track linking Osaka with Hakata, the entire course of which only takes a little over two hours, averaging 186 miles per hour (mph). Revenue from the Shinkansen line makes up roughly 44% of the company's total, and consequently JR-West focuses much of its effort on improving this service by increasing efficiency and introducing faster and more comfortable trains. Besides railway operations, the company provides transportation services by means of ferry and bus throughout the Hokuriku, Chugoku, Kinki and Northern Kyushu areas. JR-West also operates a distribution segment that is involved in the merchandising, wholesale and restaurant businesses (mostly near train stations). Additionally, it has a real estate segment that operates shopping centers, as well as hotels, travel agencies, rental services, construction, cleaning and information services. In general, transportation services generated the majority (67%) of 2008 revenue, followed by retail and food service operations (16%), real estate (6%) and other business (11%). Altogether, JR-West has 151 subsidiaries and 20 associated companies. In April 2008, the company announced a partnership with Isetan Mitsukoshi Holdings Ltd. to create West Japan Railway Isetan Ltd., a consolidated subsidiary of JR-West and an equity-method affiliate of Isetan to operate a department store in the Osaka Station North Building.

WestJet Airlines Ltd. is a low-fare airline company that provides scheduled and chartered air transportation to, from and within Canada. It serves approximately 30 destinations in Canada, 14 in the U.S., four in Mexico and seven in the Caribbean, including Jamaica and the Dominican Republic. WestJet maintains a fleet of 76 next-generation Boeing 737 aircraft and has an average fleet age of 3.2 years. The company owns four subsidiaries: WestJet Investment Corp.; WestJet Operations Corp.; WestJet Aircraft Acquisition Corp.; and WestJet Vacations. In addition, the firm offers cargo services through a partnership with ELS Marketing, Inc., a supplier of air freight related services and products. The company offers a mileage reward program in conjunction with MasterCard under the name AIR MILES Rewards. The firm plans to strengthen its position as an international carrier by increasing service destinations in Mexico and the Caribbean and by adding to its overall fleet size. In 2008, the firm had a domestic market share of close to 40%. In April 2008, the firm introduced a sleeper cabin option for select flights. In July 2008, the company announced plans to form a codeshare agreement with Southwest Airlines.

GROWTH PLANS/SPECIAL FEATURES:

Winston Hotels, Inc. is a real estate investment trust (REIT) specializing in the development, acquisition and repositioning of premium limited-service, upscale extended-stay and full service hotels, as well as provision of subordinated financing. Its portfolio is increasingly weighted toward the leading brands in the lodging industry's upscale segment. The company currently owns or is invested in 47 hotels in 16 states. The company presently operates in two business segments, hotel ownership and hotel financing. Hotel ownership refers to owning hotels directly or through joint ventures and includes Winston's development activities. Hotel financing refers to owning hotel-related loans through origination or acquisition. Winston Hotels was designated a preferred developer for the new aloft brand by Starwood and is currently reviewing several potential development sites for aloft branded hotels. The company leases hotels to its subsidiaries, Barclay Hospitality Services, Inc. and Barclay Holding, Inc. All of the company's wholly-owned hotels operate under leases with Barclay. The majority Winston's hotels operate under nationally recognized franchises, including Marriott International, Inc., Hilton Hotels Corporation, Intercontinental Hotels Group PLC and Choice Hotels International. The company actively looks to acquire new hotels, using one or more of the following criteria: properties in locations with relatively high demands for rooms; successful hotels at favorable prices; newly developed hotels; and hotels that could benefit from repositioning, rehabilitation or new management and additional capital. In early 2007, the company canceled its pending merger with Wilbur Acquisition Holding and was instead acquired by Inland American Real Estate Trust Inc. for $438 million.

Winter Sports, Inc. (WSI) operates the Big Mountain Ski and Summer Resort, located on 4,000 acres in the Rocky Mountains of Montana. Big Mountain's ski facilities include 13 chairlifts (including two high-speed quad lifts) and two T-bar lifts, which serve approximately 85 runs and over 3,000 skiable acres. WSI also operates the Hibernation House (hotel facilities), Big Mountain Sports (a ski rental, retail and repair shop), a ski school, the Summit House (a retail store at the mountain's peak) and the Outpost (a ski shop and services operation). Associated recreational opportunities include snowshoeing, Nordic skiing, tubing, snowmobiling, dog sledding, ice-skating, snowcat-served off-piste skiing and winter tours of nearby Glacier National Park. In addition, the company operates a property management business and owns over 700 acres at the base of the mountain. Approximately 47% of company revenues come from lease arrangements with other companies who use this land. The firm also operates on a limited basis between June and October, hosting a chairlift and gondola ride to the summit for sightseeing, hiking, mountain biking and other recreational activities, such as Walk in the Treetops, an elevated boardwalk in the treetop canopy. Employees at WSI receive free season passes for themselves and discounted passes for their immediate families; free group ski and snowboard lessons; discounts on equipment rentals, food and beverage purchases; free transportation from Whitefish; and supplemental health benefits.

WorldMark by Wyndham, Inc. (formerly Trendwest Resorts, Inc.), a wholly-owned subsidiary of Wyndham Worldwide, develops and markets the vacation ownership program WorldMark, The Club. It is one of the two primary brands operated by Wyndham Vacation Ownership, another subsidiary of Wyndham Worldwide. Unlike traditional timeshare owners, who have access to a specific time at a specific place, WorldMark, The Club member-owners purchase credits, which are renewed annually, to spend them like currency to reserve vacations in WorldMark resorts, giving member-owners flexibility about vacation dates and locations. The firm operates 62 WorldMark resorts, including 55 in the U.S., 44 of which are in western states, five in the Midwest and two in Florida; as well as one resort in Fiji, two in Mexico and four in British Columbia, Canada. Approximately 80% of the resorts are designed to be a short drive away from major metropolitan areas, and the remaining resorts are in exotic locations, such as those in Hawaii and Fiji. Resorts are often located near golf courses, beaches, sightseeing locations, hiking trails, romantic getaways, shopping centers, skiing slopes or family-friendly entertainment. A typical resort room includes a stocked kitchen; laundry facilities; television and video player; stereo; fireplace; private deck with access to swimming pools; indoor and outdoor spas; exercise rooms; arcade games; and sports facilities. WorldMark, The Club has over 250,000 member-owners. The firm also operates a vacation exchange partnership with Resort Condominiums International (RCI), one of the largest vacation ownership companies in the world. This partnership grants WorldMark, The Club member-owners access to thousands of resorts worldwide, for an exchange fee.

Employees of Wyndham Vacation Ownership receive medical, dental and vision plans; long- and short-term disability benefits; an educational assistance plan; adoption assistance; domestic partner benefits; paid time off; an employee assistance program; and discounts on various products and services, including hotels.

XOJET is a private aviation firm offering customers private jet ownership, leasing and on-demand travel solutions geared specifically toward frequent business jet fliers, including fractional ownership in its fleet of super-mid-sized jets. The firm averages 3-4 owners per jet, significantly below the industry average. The company's fleet consists of all new Citation X and Challenger 300 jets. XOJET offers on-demand cross-country flights at fixed prices starting at $25,000 or custom-priced flights that feature no restrictions. Programs begin at 100 hours of flying time per year with contract lengths from 1-5 years. The firm does all its maintenance in-house as a quality control measure. Based on current orders of more than $3.1 billion, the XOJET fleet will grow to a total of 127 aircraft consisting of 47 Citation X's and 80 Challenger 300's by 2012. In 2008, the firm introduced Flight Program Analyzer, a tool in which fliers can compare jet travel prices. In 2009, the company launched XOJET Market Price Assurance; in which customer purchase a Fleet Exchange Membership program starting at 50 hours and receive the lowest price for every trip without the restrictions or requirements of other fractional programs.
